NEW DIRECTIONS AN OLD TRADITION

new directions..

..an old tradition

Perched atop a stone, contemplating the hordes of arrivals catapulting upon East, Rodin's "Thinker" appears, at the very least, perplexed. After being transplanted from his very comfortable pedestal at the Nelson Art Gallery, he was forced to don a suit of armor to protect himself from what appeared to be a very rebellious lot of students. He gaped in amazement as the colorful group of students paraded by: punks, preppies, nerds, and athletes. However, he had been warned. Previous Lancers had shared with him their first day astonishment at the new directions pursued by Lancers.

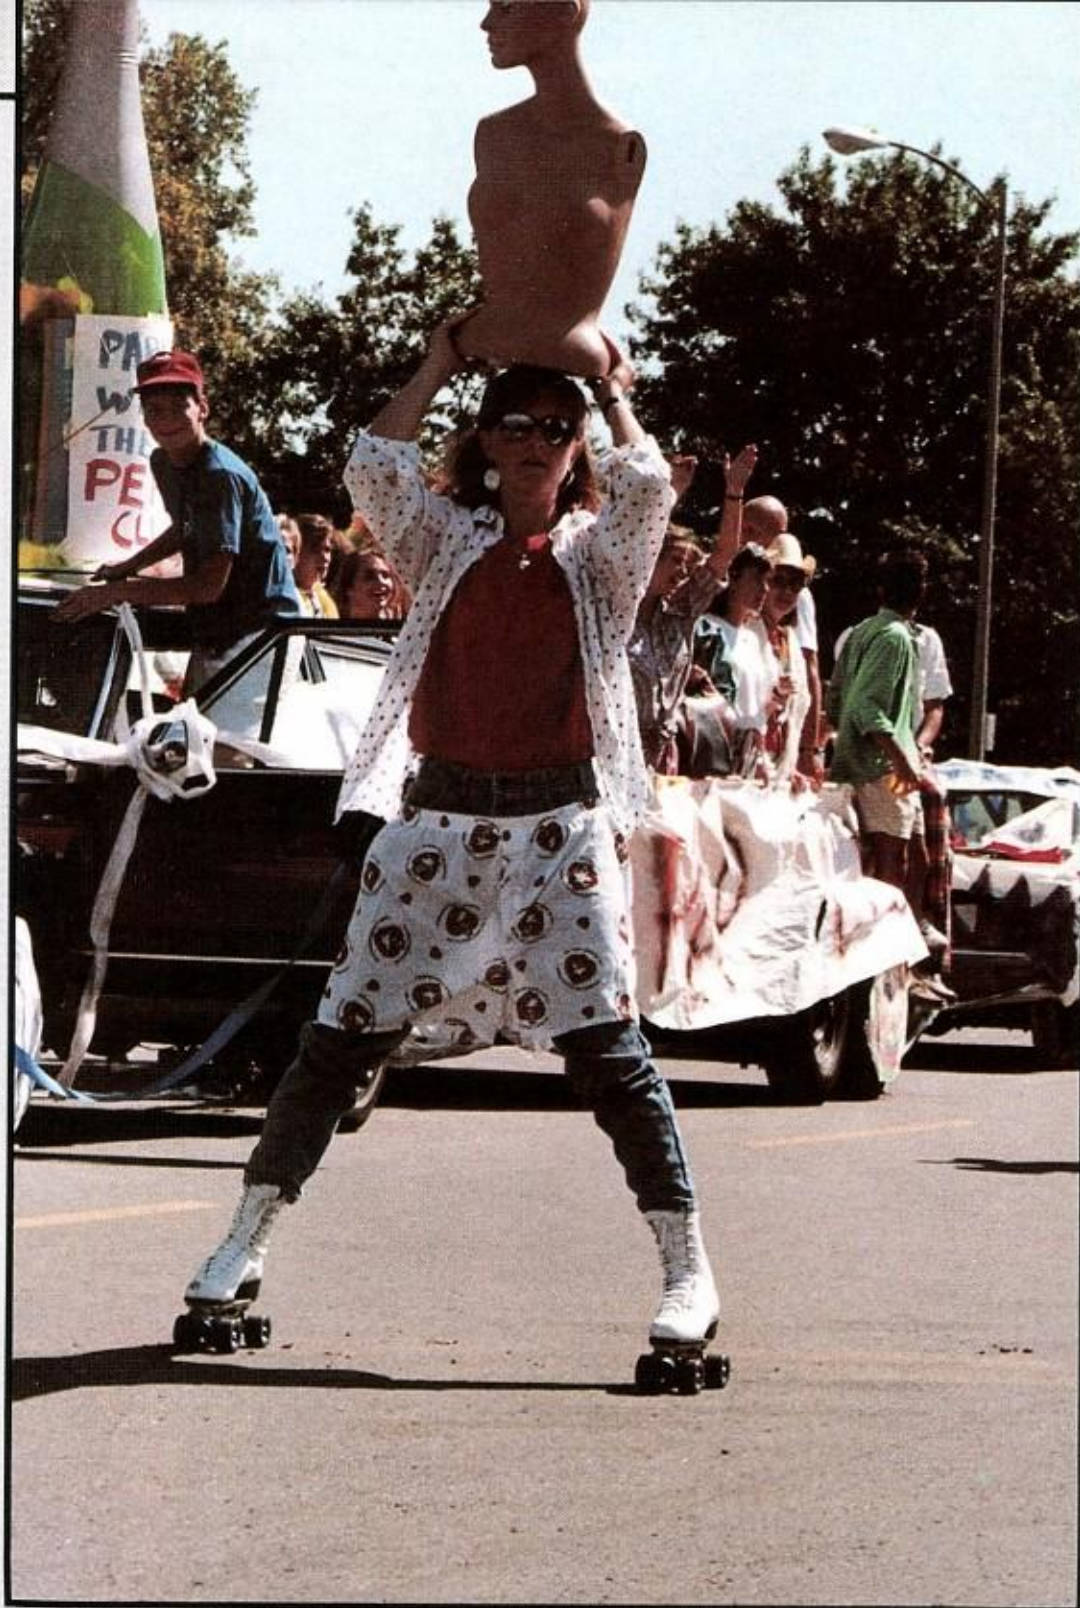

Somewhat frightened, somewhat intrigued, the knight recalled the good old days of splendor in the grass, beauty in the flower: Dr. Sandfort standing in the front hall greeting each student by name; enough time to get from class to class without sprinting or being trampled; no hall monitors; no freshmen.

But then the light went on in his helmet . . . a paradox, which comforted while it mocked. Change, that heinous monster, was not new to East. It was not, in fact, a monster at all. Change . . . a new direction . . . this was East's oldest tradition. —by Laura Rozen

Lancer Day

For the first time in three years, sunny skies welcomed the Lancer Day Parade down Mission Road for the opening football game of the season. Various sports and activity groups participated by creating floats with themes such as Christmas in September, done by the Thespians, and Peace, done by the Young Liberals. The Pep Club, Lancer Day sponsor, transformed Prairie Village Shopping Center into a convincing Lancerville for the day.

Led by senior drum major, Najeeb Ahmed, the SM East marching band, keeping in step and tune, leads the way for the elaborately decorated floats and cars in the Lancer Day Parade. (photo by Kristen Hammond)

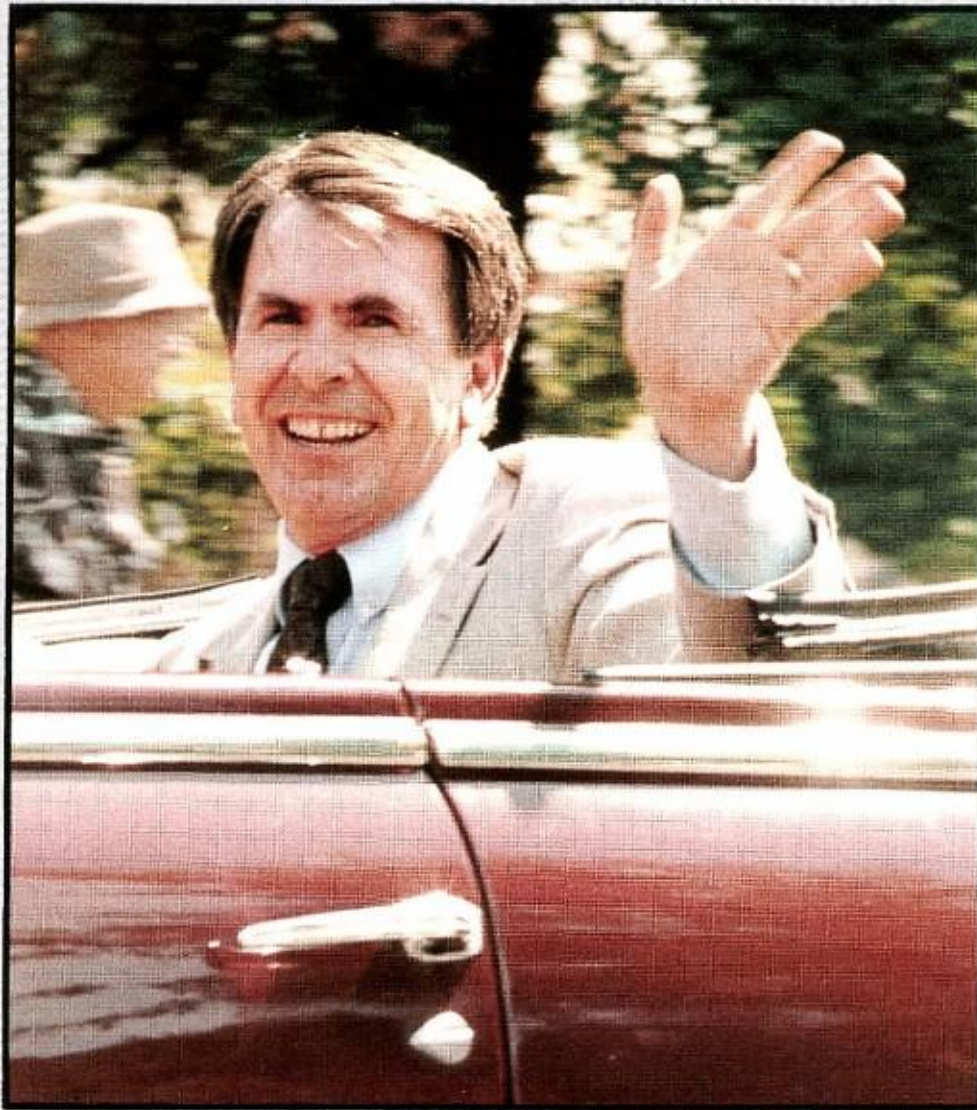

The storm that shook the school arrived in the form of the freshman class. Amidst the turnover in administration and the thunderous confusion of remodeling, the rumble of 1,950 voices echoed through the halls. Students worried that it would be impossible to get from class to class in five minutes with a two-minute wait to get up each flight of stairs. The halls were not safe in that last thirty-second rush before the bell. However, the clouds of chaos quickly evaporated, and tradition prevailed.

An organization called Big Brothers-Big Sisters was created to help the freshmen and sophomores adjust to the transition of going to high school. Senior Andy Patton attends the Spring Fling in order to meet his "little brother" and share his experiences at East. (photo by Kristen Hammond)

In order to accommodate large numbers of incoming freshmen and sophomores, many structural changes were made around the school. Over the summer, the cafeteria was remodeled to provide students with faster service. (photo by Megan Irish)

Changes

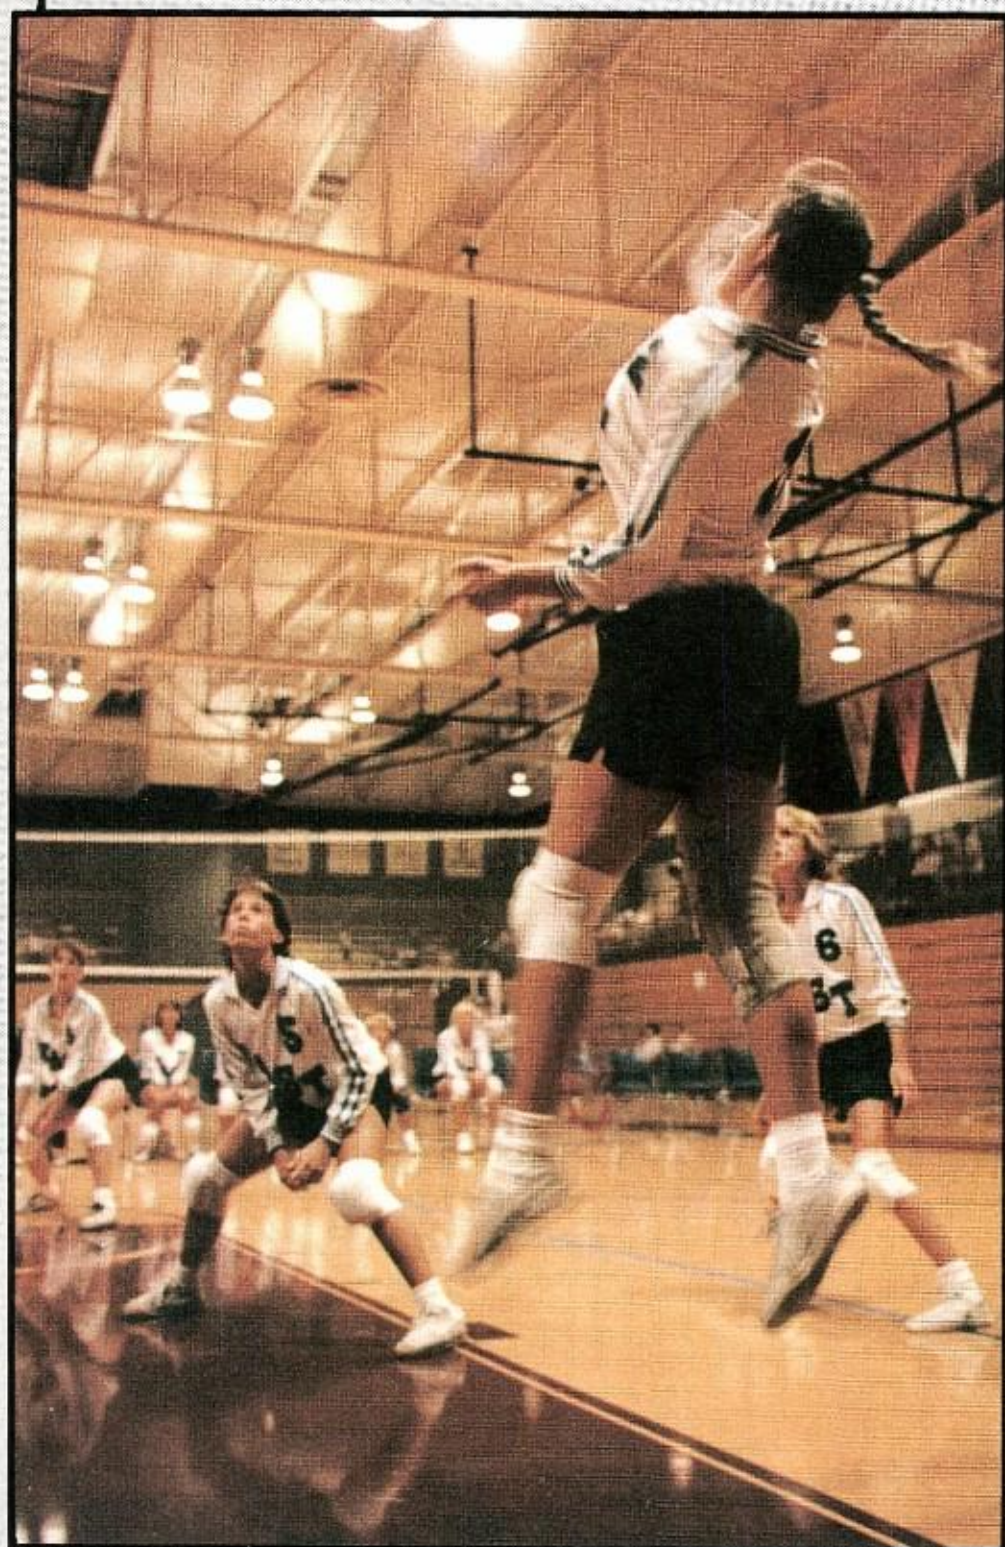

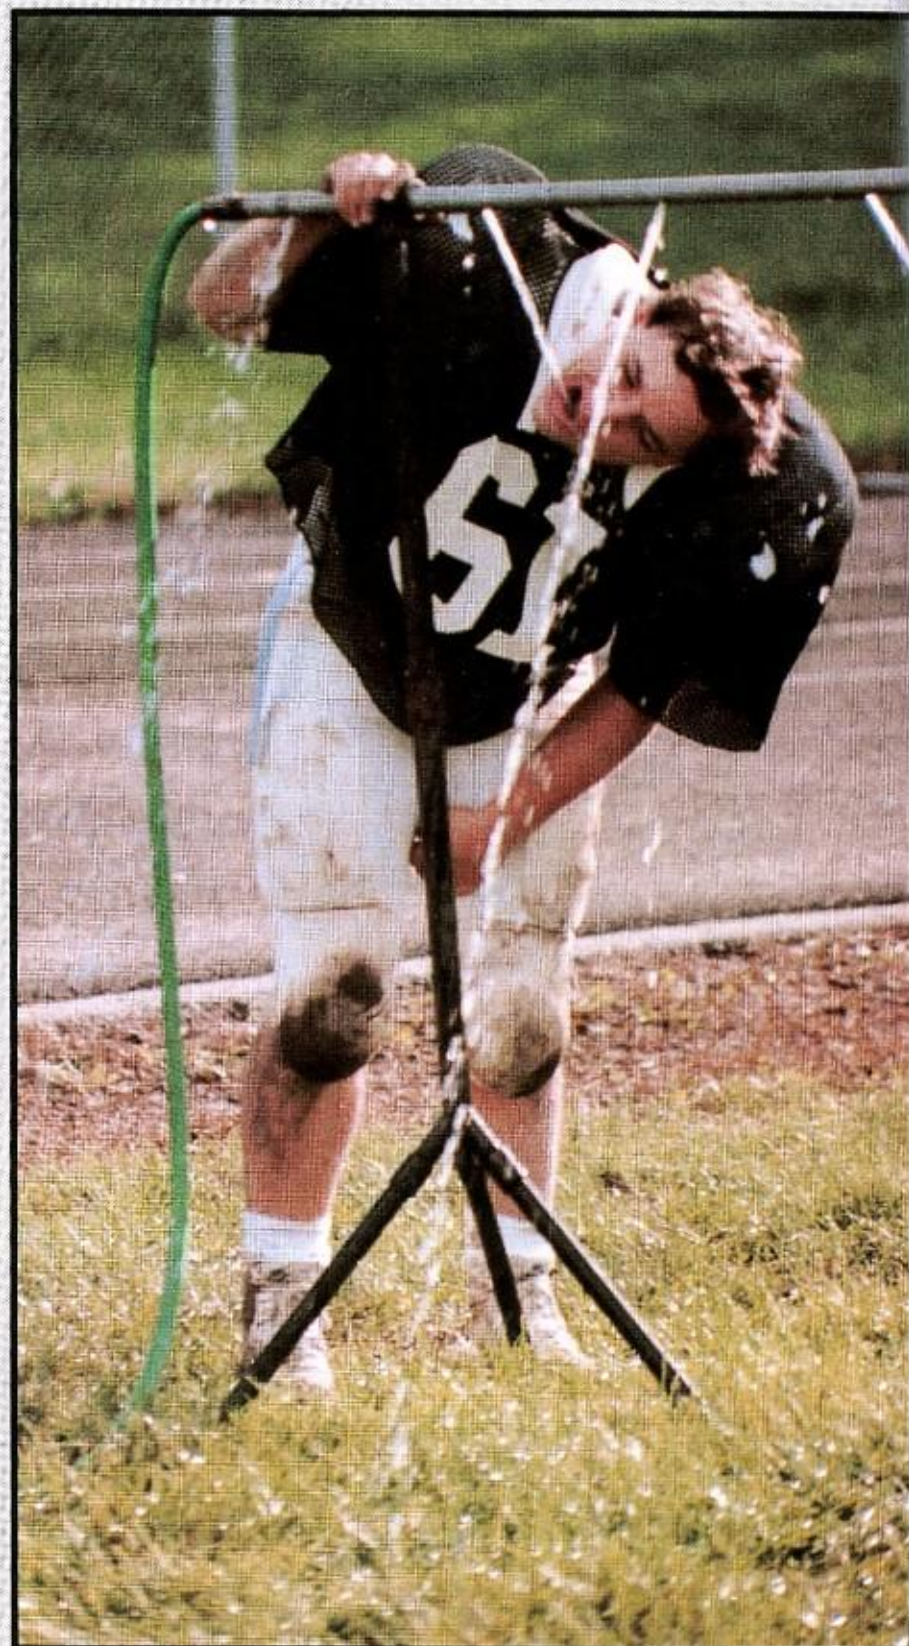

Along with the appearance of new students and new teachers, a new leader stepped forth. Dr. Marlin Stanberry relinquished his position at Nallwood to become principal at East. (photo by Kristen Hammond)

Although freshmen were unable to drive to school, many were unwilling to become dependent on their parents for transportation. For the first time, mopeds became a common sight in the East parking lot. (photo by Sally Lock)

Although players practiced in a seemingly endless drizzle, neither rain nor floods drenched the Lancer spirit. An additional boost of enthusiasm came from the tidal wave of freshmen and sophomores which hit East's athletic shores. A total of 342 new athletes doubled the participation in the fall sports and helped to offset the rather dismal weather of the season. Brad Levene said, "It was sometimes so muddy that when I would dive for the ball, I got up wearing the field."

Even though temperatures exceeded ninety degrees, the varsity football team continued with its practices. Jeremy Rapport takes a break from the workout to quench his thirst. (photo by Heather Kolb)

Sports

Summer was a time for work as well as relaxation. Senior Beth Hessler took advantage of her free hours by designing and producing colorful tie-dye T-shirts and socks. (photo by Jeanie Alford)

Fashion

Despite the radical changes in school policy this year, fashion at East remained largely unchanged, with the prep, punk, tortured intellectual, safari, and "polyester-administrator" styles dominating the hallways. And of course, some things never change; Mr. Runyan's choice of ties remained stylishly humorous.

Even though the freshmen invaded with their skateboard apparel and the radical and new wave dressers tried to dominate East, seniors Rick Moore and Kristin Deeter strove to keep the "traditional prep" look alive. (photo by Sally Lock)

Crowds

Students of every grade took advantage of the All Club Round-up as hundreds packed into the gym to gather information on extracurricular activities and uphold the long-standing tradition of being involved at SM East. (photo by Kristen Hammond)

Crowds, crowds, crowds. If a student could not be in the "in" crowd, he could at least be in "a" crowd every hour of every day. Like bees swarming in a hive, students crowded the halls on their way to class and ate everything in their paths as they marched to the cafeteria. "I had to push my way through everybody just to get to the cheese doodles," exclaimed one student. Even in light of the overcrowding it's good to know that the students have not lost their moral values.

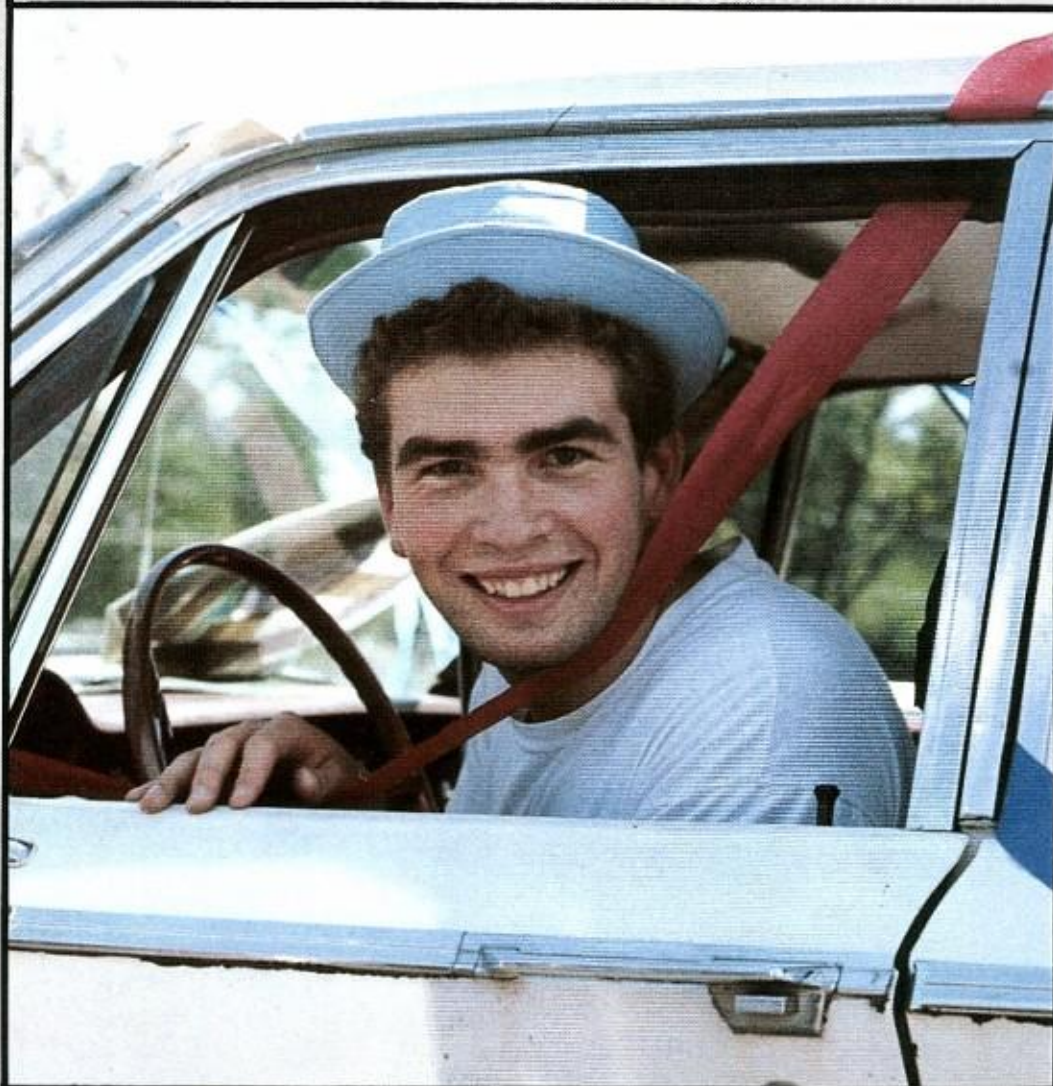

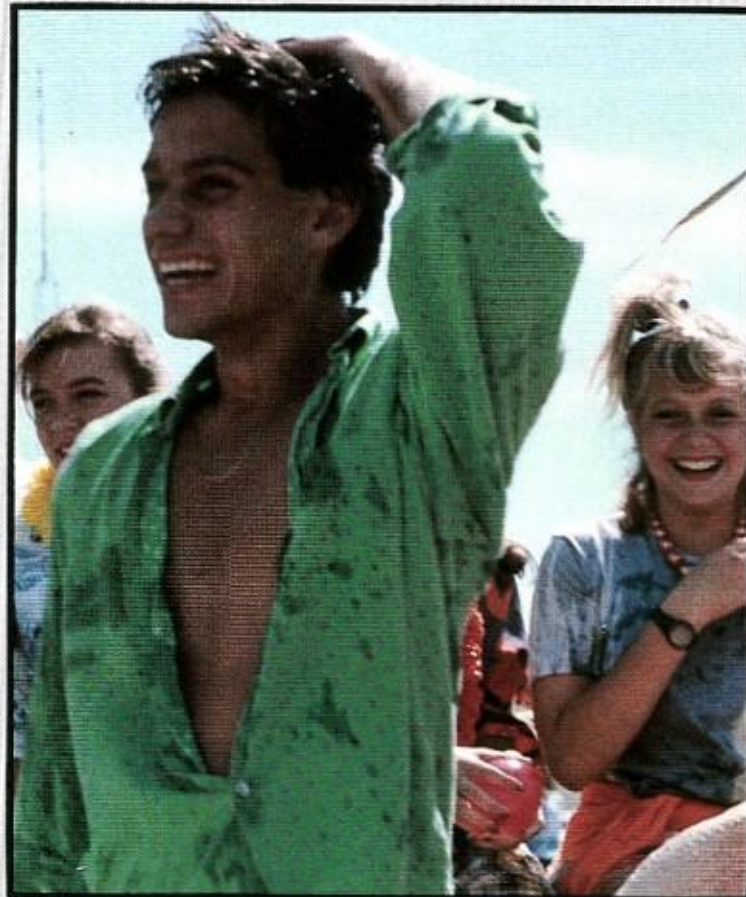

After the Lancer Day parade, a crowd gathered at the Village shopping center to listen to speeches by senior class president Steve Jenkins, Mayor Sue Weltner, and Dr. Stanberry. The parade was given in honor of the football team's first game. (photo by Rob Harsh)

Although the school underwent many changes, Lancers' activities, for the most part, remained unchanged. Open lunch continued to be a popular hiatus from the hectic school day. Favorite lunch spots included McDonalds, Pizza Hut, 7-11, and Payless. After school, seniors John Fletcher and Kim Wallace worked at Video Corner, while sophomore Christine Spink hurried home to the VCR to watch the day's episode of The Young and the Restless.

TICKLE TEAM

Where else would one see Jeff Hopkins hugging Chris O'Neal? At a pep assembly, of course. The "dating-game" take-off, featuring "Miss" Hopkins in a tight black dress, was one of many skits put on and pulled off to make the students laugh.

The purpose of the club, according to boys' pep club president, Jeff Hopkins, is to "promote school spirit, support athletics, be wild and crazy at the games, and in doing so, get everyone else crazy." Whitney Jones, the girls' pep club president, added, "We try to get the school spirited."

The other boys' executives are Richard Muller, vice-president; Rick Moore, secretary; and Blaine Degnan, treasurer. The girls' executives are Susie Harrin, vice-president; Kate Driscoll, secretary; and Christy Frank, treasurer.

The executives and representatives met Tuesday mornings to organize pep assemblies and other events. Some of the ideas for skits included an imitation of early-morning grooming, putting pies in the faces of administrators, and the twelve days of the holiday season.

The main goal was to give more support to the less recognized teams. Representatives from the pep club are not assigned to each of these games but have been asked to attend if they have extra time. That way it is not a burden on them, but it does encourage attendance.

This year, sophomores and freshmen were more involved as opposed to past years when the club was strongly dominated by juniors and seniors. The freshmen were a welcome addition. As Hopkins explained, "The more the merrier."

Pep club was responsible not only for pep assemblies but also for half-time ceremonies for Sweetheart and Homecoming queens, Lancer Day parade, hall competition, and the huge hall posters that were plastered everywhere before different sports events.

The Power Of The Pyramid

What are the building blocks of the Lancer pyramid? Varsity cheerleaders practicing twice a week at six o'clock had what it took. "The hours are tough, but it is really worth it when the squad looks good. I'm sure we'll all remember when we had to cram in early morning practices to get ready for our first pep assembly," said Maria Brazil. Showing the same dedication, Betsy Robertson said, "Although the work is worth it, it's hard to find time for other things. One week we cheered almost every day. The cheerleading schedule can get very busy." "Although we put in the hours, we had a lot of fun times and shared tons of inside jokes," said Kelly McClenehan. The work was hard, but to most, it hardly seemed like work.

To keep the pyramid symmetrical, Carolyn Howard checked up on the girls and made sure they were always on time with neat uniforms and shiny shoes. Howard said, "This year's squad continues the tradition which makes East cheerleading what it is. Consistency is important; some things never change, such as our opening ceremony, which is the same as it has been for twenty-nine years."

Proudly wearing their blue, black and white uniforms and often their fashionable Euston Hardware trash bags to protect themselves from the rain, the junior varsity squad was a talented team that worked together to support the pyramid built by the varsity girls. Their talent often came from backgrounds in dancing, gymnastics and sports. Laura McConnell said, "Dancing took the same dedication it takes to be a cheerleader." Corey Thomas said, "Gymnastics gave me the flexibility, and, most of all, the will to work."

The balance for the varsity pyramid, coming from the eight male yell leaders, caught a new spark of spirit as Howard sponsored them for the first time. "The guys got really into things and were always ready to try new stunts, especially after seeing the Northwest squad," said Beth Jennings. They were a strong foundation for the girls, and their involvement outshone that of any previous year.

The cheerleaders not only enjoyed the prestige of the position on the squad, but they also accepted the responsibilities. "We cheered two or three games a week and always had to be perfect. Miss Howard was a perfectionist, and nothing was over-looked — from spotless saddle shoes to restricted PDA in the halls."

East Spirit

Cheerleaders aren't everything. Besides the four squads of cheerleaders who appeared at pep assemblies, basketball games, and football games, several other figures appeared to promote school spirit — Heralders, Letter Girls, and the mysterious mascot.

The Lancer Letter Girls, headed by captain Robyn Jackson, sophomore, and social chairperson Melinda Farris, sophomore, cheered in the stands at football games and basketball games as well as at the end of the court at pep assemblies. Besides going to the varsity football and basketball games, the Letter Girls tried to attend at least one other function per sport/per season.

This year, the Letter Girls were first in line for the Lancer Day Parade. Gretchen Brandt, sponsor, stated that they played a very important part in school spirit because they spelled out "who's there, who's playing, who's on the field." She pointed out that they spell out the school name and mascot, and this sets them apart from other spirit groups at this school, as well as from other spirit groups at the other Shawnee Mission schools. No other district school has an organization like this.

Besides promoting spirit, they also helped the cheerleaders and yell leaders by cheering in the stands. Although they may not have been as visible this year, the Letter Girls were there to help cheer and get freshmen and sophomores involved in school activities. Farris enjoyed being a Letter Girl. She said, "I felt like a part of the school, like I was helping school spirit."

Another figure that helped the school to cheer was the anonymous mascot. This year the mascots were Susan Schorie and Katie Chipman. However, they served a slightly different role this year. Instead of a hyper body dancing everywhere, the mascot was supposed to look like a real Medieval Lancer. A new uniform was part of this change in image, and the mascot was given a new plastic suit of armor which included leg and arm plates, shield, chestplate, and full headdress. "Little kids look at me in awe to see if someone is really in there," Schorie explained, since the uniform covers so much of the body now.

The role of the Lancer is quite different from what it used to be. The armored Lancer used to ride a real horse up and down the field when the Lancers scored a touchdown. Now the Lancer is grounded but not forgotten and the armored figure is still present at football games to promote spirit.

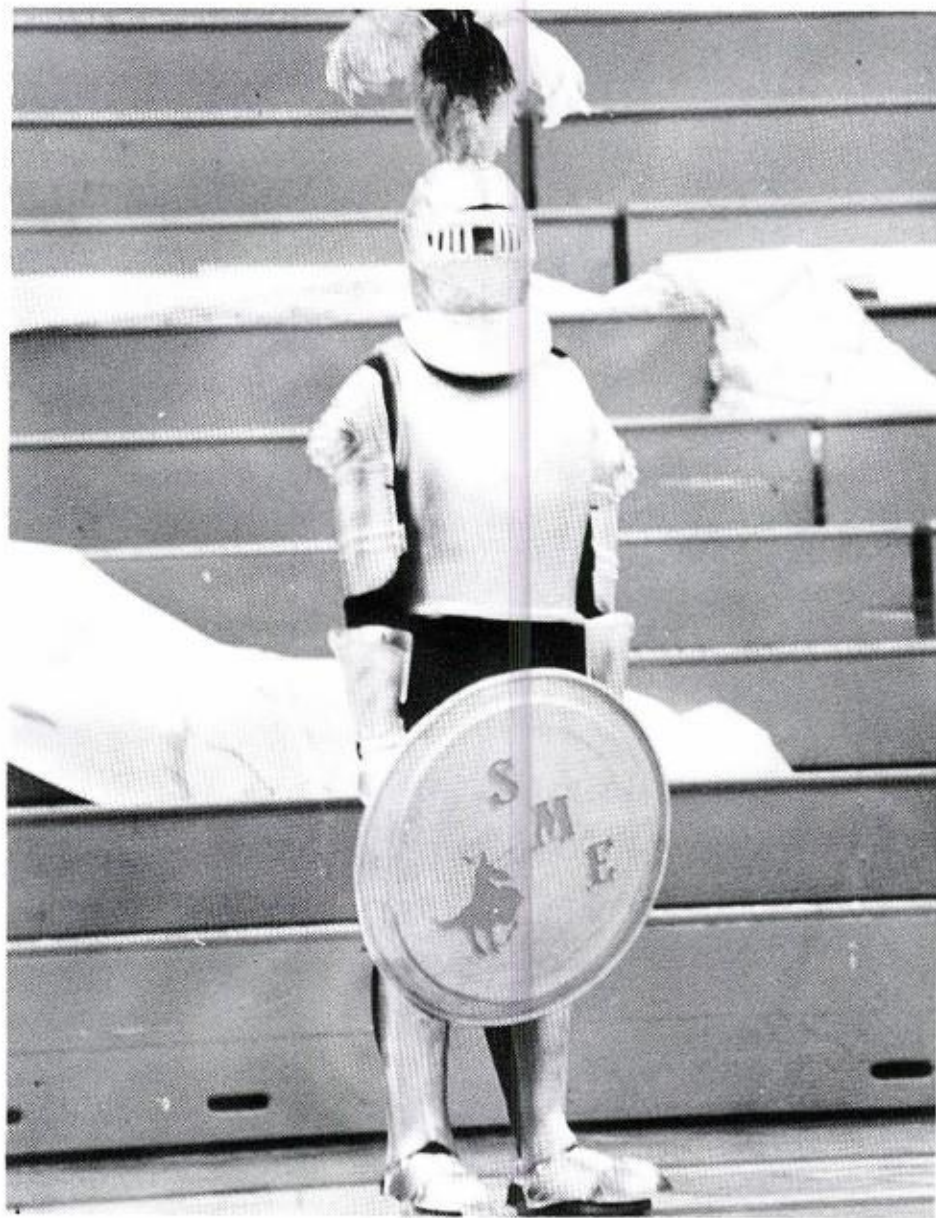

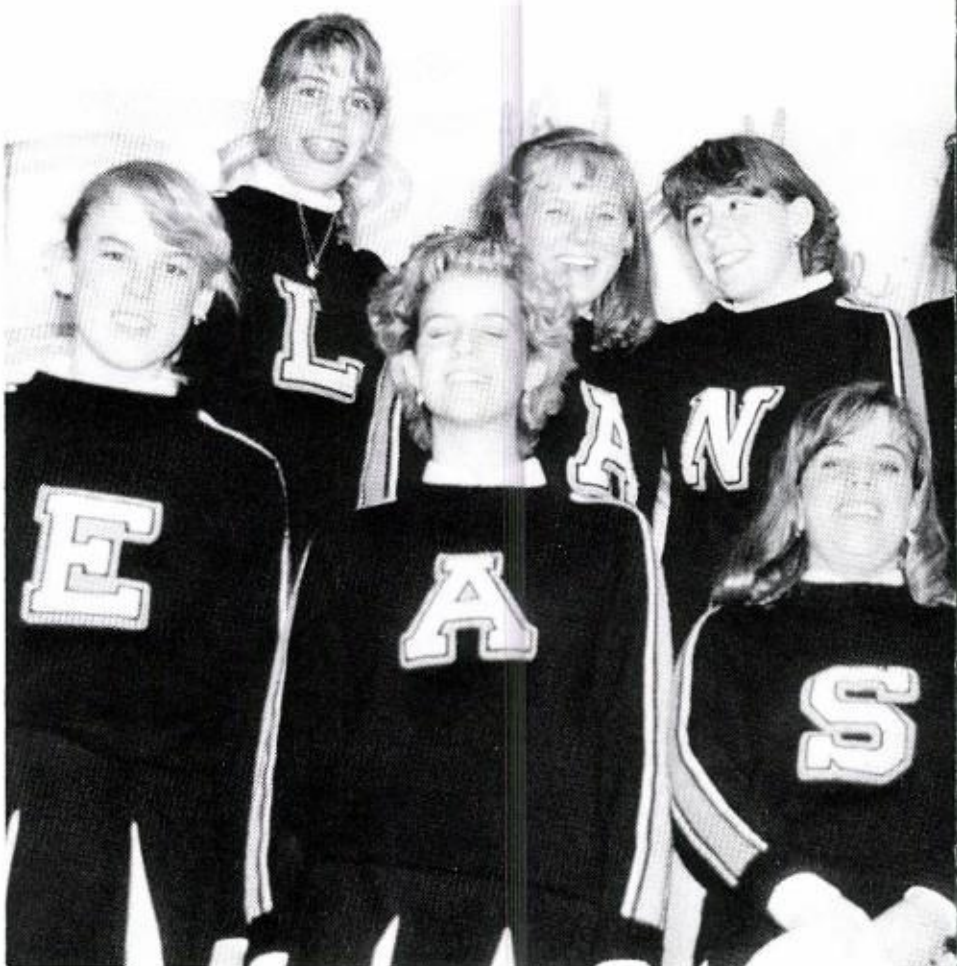

There is yet one more prestigious group that built spirit, the regal Heralders, who performed in the opening ceremonies at basketball games and pep assemblies. They were responsible for trumpeting the beginning of varsity girls' and boys' basketball games.

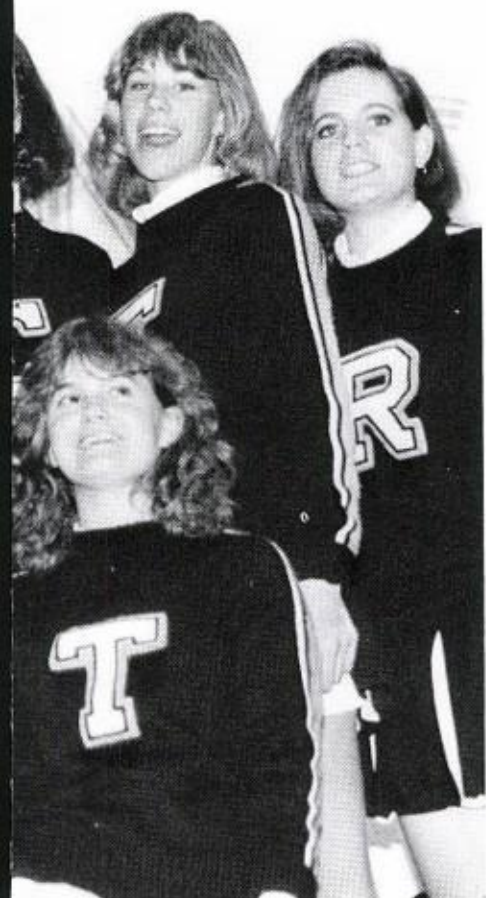

The Heralders used to be the hostesses of the school, showing new students around and introducing visitors to the school. However, SHARE now serves that purpose with the Ambassadors, and the Heralders are now limited to cheering at the games. They did help escort the Homecoming court this year at halftime. The Heralders, though purely traditional, are still visible in the school spirit of East, and all three groups play an important part in keeping up the enthusiastic tradition of the Lancers.

Redefining Style

"Working with the 9/10 team gave me more enthusiasm."

— Cari Richert, 12

10,9,8,7 take a deep breath remember "STEP, STEP, KICK!" With these thoughts overloading their anxious minds, the 1987 Drill/Flag Team proudly marched onto the football field. The 20th Century Fox ditty, provided by the SM East Marching Band, set the jazzy background for the first of many performances. Their long, strenuous hours of practice, which produced an air of effortlessness in their routines, began in August. Once school began, the Drill/Flag Team of all four grade levels and the marching band met at 7 am and practiced until 7:30, practice continuing for the junior/senior members though first hour. The freshmen/sophomore members practiced during second hour.

"At first, I felt like a spare tire. But as time went on and we worked, the unity formed. I love being a part of the team!" exclaimed Camin Richert, sophomore. Because of the wide range of ages and the different practice times, Big Sis/Little Sis, as it was affectionately termed, was initiated to draw the team together and establish friendships between the veterans and the newcomers. A successful ploy that integrated the freshmen into the team was a gift exchange.

Regulations prohibited the freshmen from wearing their uniforms during school hours, and regulations stated they could not perform in any varsity basketball games. Yet the freshmen seemed to be adjusting well under the load of rules; their school spirit and enthusiasm have spread throughout the entire squad. Patty Steckler, senior observer in the audience of the first performance, declared, "The team showed much more enthusiasm and imagination than in previous years."

Other changes in the Drill/Flag format included a name change, an increase in competitive performances, and a greater degree of prominence for the Flag Team. With the district's ruling that all sexist names must be changed so as not to offend, the former name, Synchronettes, was eliminated. No appropriate name was found, so this year's title was only temporary. The increase in competitive performances has been initiated by the new band director, Kim Harrison, and the increase provided the freshmen with more performing experience.

The last major change was a greater degree of prominence for the Flag Team. When asked about the increase in lime-light this year, Dawn Brown, 1st Lieutenant of the Flag Team, commented, "It's about time!" The Flag Team performed with the Drill section of the squad during all performances. Debbie Ogden commented, "Even though the age span is greater this year, I feel that the team is closer and working for a central goal: to be the best we can be and constantly strive for improvement."

Reaching For Excellence

The audience leaned forward in their seats. Hanging onto a lush mezzo piano tone, the choir, with the effective direction of conductor Dan Zollars, enticed the audience. These dynamics were characteristics of all the choral concerts.

The Holiday Vespers in December and Masterworks concerts in February have been the traditional highlights of the year. In addition to singing solely to entertain, the choirs compete in the State Music Festival for "adjudication and rating, where traditionally the groups do pretty well," said Mr. Zollars.

The SM East Choral Music Department is a strong framework of singers in the Chamber Singers, Choraliers, the Concert Choir and the Girls' Choir. Mr. Zollars explained, "Everyone is working well together to make a good program."

To become eligible to be a member of the choirs, each singer is judged on tone quality, pitch memory, rhythm and sight singing. Mr. Zollars stated that he believed, "A good singer should have a good attitude, the ability to listen, and to blend into an ensemble setting."

Each choir is different and has a unique personality. The comradery among the singers inspires the East choirs to reach the high levels of singing they are so noted for.

The Band's New Twist

Ever since anyone can remember, the Marching Band has worn the same polyester uniforms, and the Pep Band has played "Proud Mary" at basketball games. Even though these time-honored traditions make the band seem impervious to change, they were greeted this year by some significant changes. The most important difference was the addition of the new director, Mr. Harrison. Although anxious to meet their new director, the band was somewhat dismayed by his instigation of a new marching style. Learning the new style required extra summer practice, led by the seniors. That kind of senior initiative particularly impressed Mr. Harrison and helped improve the Band's overall performance.

Those performances were seen most often through the Marching Band (all Band members) at football games and the Pep Band (Band volunteers) at the basketball games. But, it would be an understatement to assume that was all they did. There was also a Jazz Ensemble (selected members) that played with the other bands at the Winter Concert, February Masterworks Concert, and a May Concert, all of which were open to the school. In April, the expressions on their faces tightened as they prepared to put another notch in their trombones at the Regional and State Music Festivals, where they have traditionally earned the highest rating.

Most people are not aware of the competition on the State Level and within the Band itself. This ignorance may be due, in part, to the Band room's relative isolation from the rest of the school. The Band would very much like to remedy this through exposure to the school and encourage all students to attend their recitals.

Mellifluous Melodies

If you can imagine the clamor of dozens of instruments simultaneously tuning up and slowly resolving into a graceful melody by one of the great masters, then you can get a pretty good idea of what a typical morning at orchestra sounds like.

First hour every morning, orchestra conductor Jonathan Lane led the SM East orchestra in a comprehensive rehearsal designed to transform students into masters of the great works of Beethoven, Bach, Mozart, Brahms, and Gliere.

Lane described his second year with the orchestra as "very challenging" and cited Beethoven's Symphony #1 and Gliere's Russian Sailor's Dance as the hardest works yet performed. Considering the challenge, Lane said that the works were "going quite well" with the orchestra.

Junior Genevieve Kunst remarked: "Mr. Lane is a true inspiration to me and is currently playing a major role in the development of my future."

The orchestra performs at least once a quarter and combines once a week with selected band members to form the full orchestra, which performs works on a scale comparable to those of the Kansas City Symphony.

Sophomore Kirk Patton described the orchestra experience: "Mr. Lane's orchestra furthers the orchestral development of the players and provides a basis for exceptional musical learning in the school; I find myself academically, musically, and mentally challenged."

Throughout the school year, the SM East orchestra filled the school halls with the resounding tones of the classical composers.

Who's Behind The Music Man?

"Seventy-Six Trombones" came parading down River City, Iowa, in 1912, headed up by Marian Paroo and her "White Knight," The Music Man. The story began as a con, with professor Harold Hill trying to pass as a music director, and "Marian the Librarian" completely distrusting the new stranger and his talk about "Ya Got Trouble." It ended with the perfect romance between the two and with a new band that promised hope for the future.

Korey Ireland, senior, who played Harold Hill, commented, "I was really worried about a week before the show, especially when it came time for dress rehearsal, and we still had problems, but the energy and magic of opening night made everything pull together." Korey has performed in all of the musicals at East and said that this one was definitely the best.

Becky Barling, senior, who played Marian Paroo, said that although the show took a considerable amount of work, she enjoyed every minute of it. "Marian is a lot like me, so it was easy to play." Much of the show's success can be accredited to the casting. Everyone was well suited to his or her part, and the addition of the junior high and elementary students made River City more realistic in the minds of the audience.

However, the show could not have been successful without the crew and orchestra, who worked together to help create that special atmosphere for the audience. Some of the crew heads put in over seventy hours of work, and the orchestra worked hours and hours. It was the "Techies" such as Thomasin Byrum, senior; Teej Anissy, junior; Hunt Wornall, junior; and Wendy Gibson, senior, who polished off the set and props and who worked the difficult scene changes during the show. Mastering the changes from the Madison gymnasium to the footbridge took a considerable amount of coordination and exact timing, so the crews spent extra time working through all the problems. Laura Russell, senior; Marcia Bertsch, junior; and Jenny Kim, senior, were the ones who made the cast look dynamic in their period costumes and make-up. Often Russell and Bertsch stayed after, searching for "ice cream colored costumes" or organizing approximately one hundred costumes, while keeping within the budget. The girls kept busy during the show with seven fast costume changes occurring at the same time in Act

I alone. Many of these were changes into dresses with hooks and eyes running the length of the dress, a difficult task to deal with in the dark! John Denby, junior, and Rick Gibson, sophomore, were often found puttering around in their bear slippers in the sound/lights booth. They were the ones who kept the spot on the leading lady and man throughout the show and the ones who coordinated the train whistles, weather sounds, and the wagons rumbling up the street. Russell summed up the crew's goal by saying, "Every detail matters. They help create that special atmosphere for the audience."

A Good Dream

Shakespeare. The name conjures up images of a bearded bard slaving away over a tattered manuscript, creating what will be a venerated work to scholars and a crashing bore to students.

To actors, Shakespeare means an exceptionally well-written play that everyone loves to read but hates to memorize. Such was the sentiment among East's acting community when William Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream was announced as the 1986 fall play.

After the auditions early in the first quarter, the cast and crew lists were posted and the challenge of producing a Shakespearean drama aroused those involved. Enthusiasm mounted as Kristi Patterson, senior, proclaimed, "People usually think that Shakespeare is boring, but it's great! It has sex, satire, romance, mythology, and a lot of fairies."

The play is a series of subplots involving a group of rustics, a royal family, four young lovers, a fairy king and queen, and other woodland fairies.

As the construction, paint, and lights crews labored on their complex technical tasks, the cast sweated through hours of grueling blocking maneuvers, memorizations, and character building exercises, hoping to perfect the essence of Shakespearean acting.

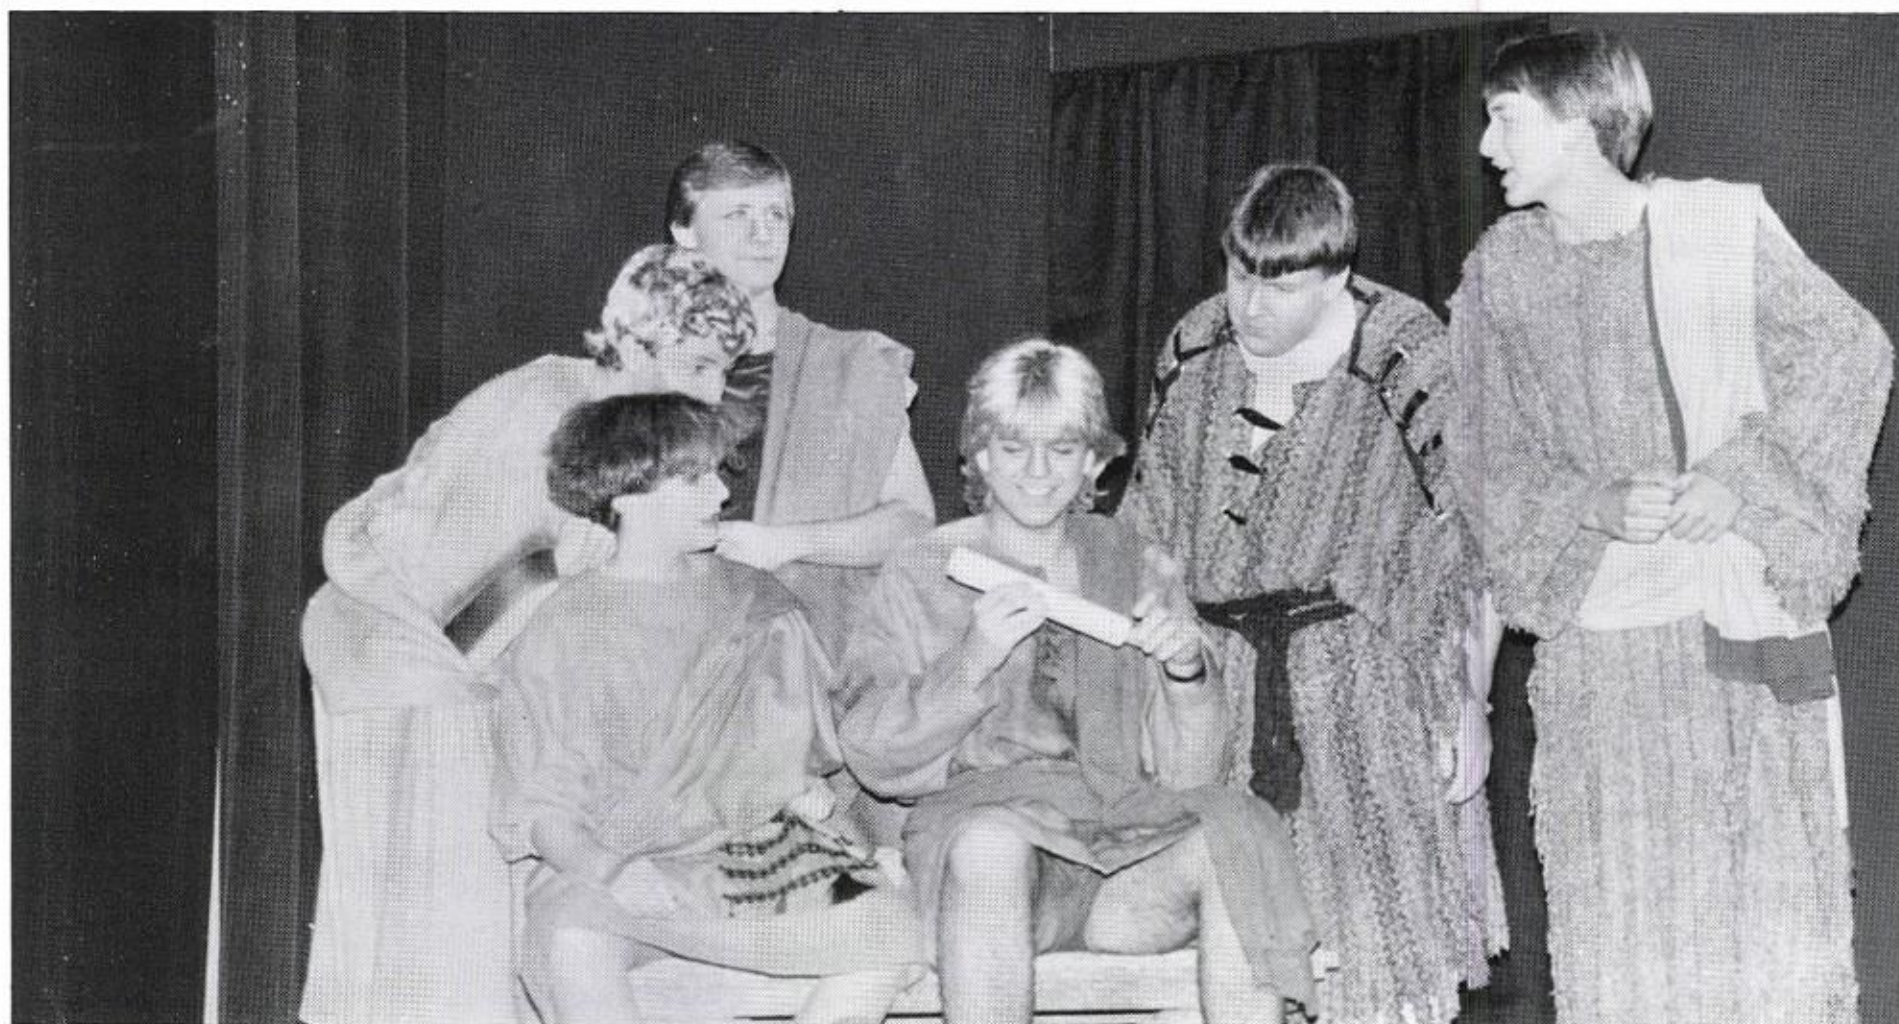

Opening night found the cast clamoring to get ready, checking makeup, and making last-minute costume adjustments, while the crew perused the set for flaws and prepared for curtain time.

In the end, the hard work paid off. After three nights of success with A Midsummer Night's Dream, director Missy Taylor praised the actors for "a superior job of interpreting Shakespeare." Senior Curt Shirling added, "We didn't think that a high school could pull off Shakespeare, but we did a really good job. The toughest part of the play was when Shakespeare himself came in and critiqued us. He thought it was great."

It's Thess — pians

Many people at East are oblivious to the Thespians, a shadowy group of diehard theater buffs responsible for football concessions and holidays in the wrong month: "Christmas in September" and "Halloween in November."

In reality, the Thespians (usually mispronounced Thez'-bians) were perceived as the people who yelled odd things in the halls, wore creative clothing, and improvised characters in the halls before school.

Thespian sponsor Missy Taylor defined the club as "a nationally recognized honor society for excellent participation in theater productions." She added, "It is indicative of a lot of hard work and the commitment of lots of time."

One may become a member of the Thespians through the accumulation of ten "Thespian Points," representing approximately one hundred hours of theater work.

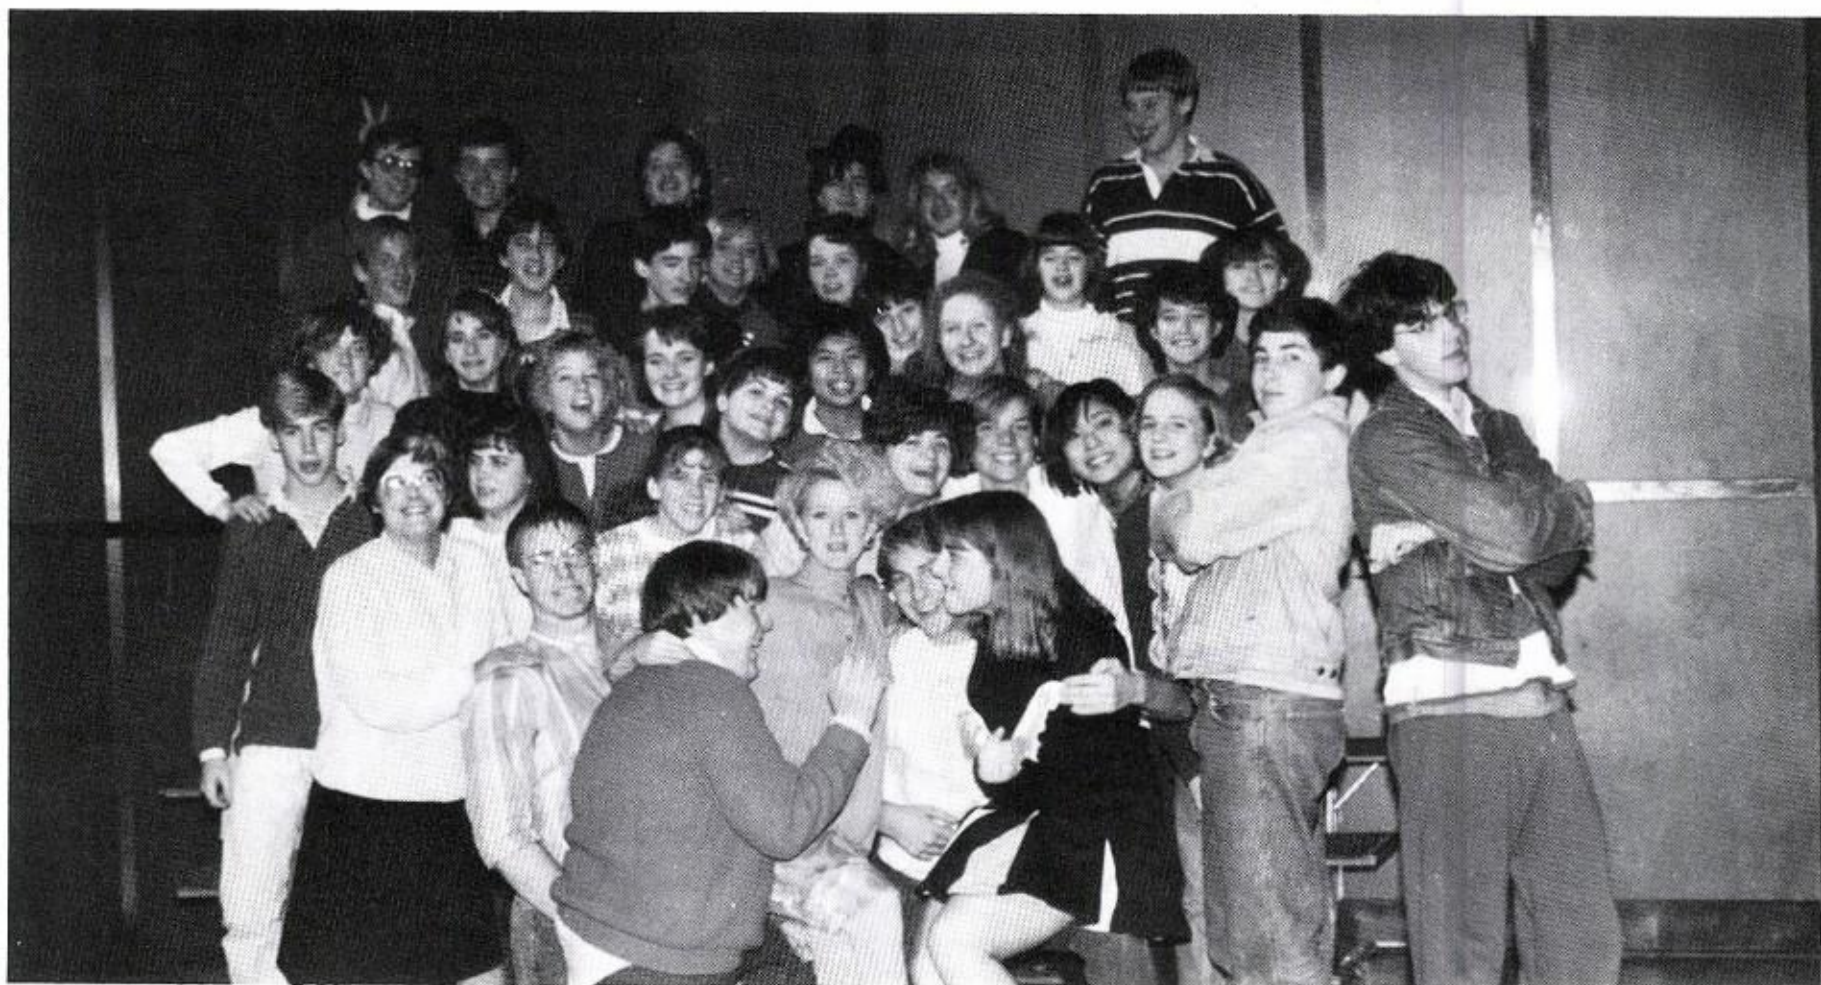

The Thespian power wielders this year were Kathy Henson, president; Kristi Patterson and Curt Shirling, first vice presidents; Linda Weisenborn, second vice president; Mike Porter, secretary; and Jason Stein, treasurer.

In the Lancer Day parade, the Thespians created a float that captured first place. One Thespian declared: "We bought out TG&Y, put it all on an ancient station wagon, and passed it off as a float It was the ultimate display of school spirit!"

Arguing The Point

The second hand completed its journey around the clock face, marking the lapse of one minute. The timer, a student volunteer, removed the top card from the stack she was holding, displaying the card directly beneath it. She glanced at the new card: "30," for thirty seconds remaining, and then at the clock. The final speaker, a senior wearing a coat and tie, giving the final rebuttal, hurriedly summarized, then ended his speech with, "... from these arguments, I can see no result but an Affirmative decision. Thank you."

Debate is defined by Webster's as "a formal contest of skill in reasoned argument." Unfortunately, it's not that simple. The definition does not mention the hours spent in preparation or the nervousness and energy expended. Those responsible for holding a tournament found it to be a major undertaking. This year SME held its Twenty-ninth Annual Debate Tournament. Although East students participated in invitationals throughout the state, they did not take an active part in the one hosted by East. Instead, debate students and other volunteers, both students and professionals, took on the administrative duties.

Sponsor Larry Brown explained the season: "Each student may attend up to eight invitationals, but few attend that many." Debaters across the country debate the same topic at the invitationals. Brown ventured, "Every year the topic is different. This year we debated agriculture." Brown hopes next year's topic will be Latin America. The invitational season ended the weekend of January the eleventh and twelfth. Regionals were held the following week, with the top two schools going to State. Of Regionals, Brown commented, "It's very tough, with all five Shawnee Mission schools, Olathe North, Harmon, and Blue Valley. Despite rigid competition, debaters won many rounds, placing well in various invitationals."

The epitome of liberals: long hair, baggy Mexican peasant blouse, bell bottom jeans, sandals, and a large peace medallion to top off the look. However, this stereotype is a complete misconception. "Being a liberal allows a person to be morally and intellectually right, as well as the ability to be a decent politician," Trevor Kellehan explained.

The rising interest in the Young Liberals Club has led to the beginning of a strong framework for the club. In the fall, the liberals and conservatives held debates concerning capital punishment and policies concerning Nicaragua and South Africa. Mr. Boley, English teacher and club sponsor said, "Those debates were spirited and interesting. They were kind of disorganized and rambunctious — but a lot of fun."

Liz Rosenberg, the president of the Young Liberals Club, said the difference between the liberals and conservatives is that "Conservatives think we don't need to change policies now or ever. We are open to change, but they are satisfied with the status quo."

Mr. Boley added that he was striving to get the club to establish "some kind of philosophy that we as liberals share. We need some philosophical definition." Todd Underwood said, "I think all high school students are liberals except those influenced by their parents' beliefs. Those who care are too well informed to be otherwise."

Mr. Boley concluded, "I had no idea that there were this many liberals in Johnson County."

The epitome of conservativeness: short, well-cut hair, carefully knotted tie, cleanly pressed white shirt (perhaps with a minute pin-stripe if the wearer is particularly daring), and the inevitable jacket (usually navy with brass buttons). This has become a fairly common sight at East, with one slight variation: directly below that nice sports jacket, the white shirt is tucked neatly into bluejeans. Political parties and the major issues that go with them have invaded our otherwise peaceful ignorance. Students are becoming increasingly aware of important, wide-spread issues and the effects their outcomes have on individual lives.

Begun last year by Alex Henson and Max Harvey (1986 graduates), the Young Conservatives party flourished, almost doubling its membership. Co-chairman, senior John Tikwart, believed the group stood for "a new approach to old ideas." Co-chairman, senior Greg Schoofs, thought that its purpose was "to learn about all kinds of different problems in America." They tried to alert students to various controversial subjects by holding debates with the Young Liberals. Topics included capital punishment, abortion, Central America, and South Africa. President and spokesman, senior Andy Patton, explained: "We were in there to try to advance our position." The meetings and debates were not completely serious. Schoofs admitted it was "a lot of fun to get in and discuss things with an opposing viewpoint." The debates were considered a success by most. Schoofs continued, "We had some pretty heated discussions. This generates interest." The group voiced its opinions, thus promoting the conservative frame of mind. If the group had a reference point, or a handbook, Barry Goldwater's Conscience of a Conservative would be a definite choice. Patton commented, "It would make a conservative out of anyone."

A Not So Trivial Pursuit

What year was the Spanish Armada destroyed? What is the largest island in the Indian Ocean? Who wrote The Mayor of Casterbridge? Who was the first American to win the Nobel Prize for literature?

If you know the answers to these questions or can at least make an intelligent guess, then perhaps you should have been on the Categories team. For those of us who cannot begin to fathom the answers to them, perhaps we should have watched the show more often.

The categories team, sponsored by Skip Graham, has once again put together an excellent team that presently stands undefeated in their first four tournaments. The thirteen students who scored highest on the one hundred and fifty fill-in-the-blank Categories tryout test were chosen to be on the team. The majority of the team consisted of seniors, with about seven underclassmen.

Senior Greg Wimpey seemed to be the player of renown on the team this year. He was the captain and also the only one who had participated in Categories previously. He has been on Categories since his sophomore year. Wimpey commented, "I am confident that we will do well for the rest of the season." The Hi-Q tournament in Wichita will provide much competition with approximately eighty teams competing for six spots.

Wendy Feng, senior, wrapped it up, saying, "Categories is a lot of fun, except seeing yourself on T.V. Everyone seemed to watch the show when you make a mistake. It's like representing your school in a big game of Trivial Pursuit."

If you're wondering what the answers to the questions are, I asked Greg Wimpey, and he said, "1588, Madagascar, Thomas Hardy, and Sinclair Lewis."

The Stuff Of Dreams

As time in the Special Edition of Monday Night Basketball winds down, enthusiasm mounts. The score is tied. The ball is loose. There is a scramble. Ten sets of eyes suddenly blossom to full size as ten separate endings are played out in ten separate minds, all with the same ultimate ending: Victory with the visionary as the hero. This scene is played out twice every Monday night, thanks to Intramurals, where any spunky kid with a decent jump can be Magic Johnson for a night. This year, even the girls had an opportunity to participate. Alongside the twenty male teams were four female teams who made up their own league. The twenty male teams were divided into leagues based on grade level, the senior class being best represented by ten teams, followed by the juniors with seven, and sophomores with three. Each team played two games a night within its league until each had competed against all the others. The end of the season was marked by a tournament that pitted the top teams against each other, the schedule being determined by a very long, drawn out formula that Coach Steigmeier created in his basement involving square roots of proportions of the number of teams, multiplied by the average height, added to how much each player spends on lunch, or something like that. In any event, after the tournament, the top student team won the right to embarrass the faculty in a school championship game played during school. The International Club sponsored the final game and charged a nominal fee for admission.

But, tournaments and championships did not show the essence of intramurals. For these washed up basketball heroes, it was simply being able to play with good friends that made it fun. Even in the case of Joel Joyce, who wanted nothing more than to beat Monroe Burgess's team, the feeling of friendship was the dominant emotion.

The Front Page

Newspaper. The word conjurs up the mental image of a desk surrounded by cigarette butts. At the desk sits a harried reporter, cigarette dangling from his mouth, typing frenziedly as the glowering editor looks over his shoulder, à la The Front Page.

Although things were a little more laid back at Harbinger headquarters, both the fall and spring staffs put forth maximum effort to give East students all the news that was fit to print. Senior Steve Neptune, first semester editor-in-chief, said, "The newspaper is the best, if not the only way of communicating with all the students; therefore, we wanted to focus on issues that affected the students by improving the quality of news articles, and by writing editorials and articles that highlighted students' achievements." These goals were furthered by the spring Harbinger staff. Senior Ann Hall, second semester editor-in-chief, summarized: "We wanted to report on what affects the students in a way that was as interesting and as appealing as possible." One way that the Harbinger staff endeavored to appeal to its audience was by experimenting with a type of writing called Sights and Sounds. For this type of writing, a staff member would write an article based on what he heard and saw at a given location. Junior Valerie Rockwell, author of a Sights and Sounds article about a racquet club, commented, "The purpose of this type of article is not to draw conclusions, but to give the reader a sense of the place, and to make him feel as if he is really there. I liked doing the article because it was different, and since I'm on the ad staff, it was an opportunity to have something published in the paper."

While a willingness to experiment played a role in the success of this year's Harbinger, the most important factor in the success of any publication is the people behind it. "The fall staff had more esprit de corps than any group I've ever worked with," reflected Harbinger adviser Mr. Dillon. "I expected the same excellent effort from the spring staff, and I was not disappointed."

Delight In Disorder

"So foul and fair an experience I have not known," said Mrs. Skates, yearbook sponsor, (who happened to be teaching Macbeth at the time). "I hate it, and I love it."

This love-hate relationship seemed to be the prevailing attitude among the Hau-berk staff. "It's a pain, but it's fun, or should I say funny — especially at 12 A.M.," remarked editor-in-chief Diane Roberts about the inherent stress involved in yearbook production. "I now undergo psychiatric therapy at least once a week. Also, I've had no time to fill out college applications, so I'm headed for JUCO!"

The atmosphere seventh hour in room 135 was one of the delight in disorder.

Amidst crazy goings-on, writers and photographers alike worked determinedly to meet deadlines, while frazzled editors were besieged on all sides by questions. Yet despite the pandemonium, the goal remained in sight. Everyone was sure where he was going.

"At first, I would get the biggest headache every day; it was so frustrating," admitted layout editor Jessie Ullmann. "You can't really appreciate what's involved until you've lived through a fourteen-hour blowout at Diane's house the night before a deadline. But I like the responsibility, and because I am involved, I really care about how the book turns out."

Most members of the staff agree that they've developed a peculiar love-hate relationship with this thing called the yearbook. They also agree that the end quality of the publication will be worth the present headaches. So give them a bottle of aspirin, and they'll give you a year of your life enclosed within two black covers . . . not a bad deal.

Creative Echoes

Frustrated artists, timid poets and all-around creative people hear East's literary magazine's call. Voice, an outlet for all of the above, accepts student-submitted art, poetry, stories, essays, song lyrics and photography. Voice, formally called Labyrinth, consisted of a relatively small staff. Teacher/sponsor, Mr. Skip Graham, held this title along with three literary editors, Joyce Campbell, Wendy Feng and Stephanie Wright; an art editor, Craig Fleming; a photography editor, Jenny Delaney; the publicity director, Laura Rozen, and the general staff.

Compared to last year, most aspects of the magazine stood the same. One such similarity dealt with the layout. Voice combined photography and art with all forms of literature. "Due to the limited range of literature in past years' magazines, this year, we strove to include a more varied selection of entries — more essays, stories, thoughts and lyrics in addition to the basic poetry," said senior Joyce Campbell. Another aspect that remained the same was the critiquing process. The first step was to take off the name of the author so as to ensure a complete unbiased judgement. Next, the piece was copied and submitted to each person on the panel of editors. The numbered pieces of literature were rated on their style, content, creativity and expression. After all the works were rated, the highest rated works were chosen for the magazine. Another contrast to last year dealt with the number of entries. Because there was a smaller number of entries this year, the competition tended to be a little less stiff. When asked what the main purpose of Voice was, Elizabeth Isaac responded, "Voice gives students an audience for their creative work."

Which club has mandatory meetings for all of its members every school day of the year? The German Club, of course. It is different from other clubs in that it involves every student taking a German class. Although many students take little notice of the club, it has been an integral part of SM East for 10 years.

The purpose of the club is to "make German more interesting," explained Joel Nagel, club sponsor and German teacher. The club's main event this year was the Oktoberfest, held on Monday, October 27. The menu consisted of German sausages and apple cider, and the guests danced to German music. The evening was financed by the students themselves because the club has exhausted its money from past fund-raisers.

Several years ago the German Club made a relative fortune selling Gummi-Bears, but faculty members complained about the wrappers and tardies caused by the sales. Outside of the annual party, the money was used for the cuckoo clock, the special video tape machine for German video cassettes, and the steins that decorate the wall above the door.

Lack of funds has not destroyed the German Club or its spirit, however. The students supported its activities and enjoyed the diversion from their other classes.

Ciao!

One way to travel without airport hassles, foreign currencies, and unusual foods is to join the International Club. The club has tripled last year's record membership and has reached a new high of 180 paid members. Many changes have occurred since last year, and its success can be attributed to several areas.

"The purpose of the International Club ... is to promote international friendship and understanding among the youth of the world," said Gene Criley, head sponsor. The ultimate goal is peace among all countries through understanding of other beliefs. Club members want to "make people more aware of the cultures of foreign countries," added Jennie Delaney, publicity chairman.

Much of the club's success can be attributed to the foreign students, who are the heart of the club. "We have such a fantastic group of foreign students," stated Criley. Strange as it seems, three pair of the eight students come from the same country: Kristine Aarvold and Anne Berit Skauerud from Norway, Lucas Bonachera and Javier Cuadrado from Spain, and Mauro Carneiro and Lou Rebeschini from Brazil. The other two students are from Africa: Lilly Assefa from Ethiopia and Sophie Pillen from Zaire. Emily Carbaugh, vice president, said, "The exchange students seem to be more a part of the club and the school this year."

The school has also become more a part of the club. Some of the speakers included East's Cory McBride, who spent the last two summers in South America; Heather Kolb, who spent the summer of 1985 living with a family in Italy; a group of kids who recently returned from similar AFS experiences in the summer of 1986; and the Norwegian girls, Aarvold and Skauerud. Among other activities, the club had a Halloween party for its members, went to foreign food restaurants, and put on a banquet at the end of the year. For the first time in years, the club even ordered t-shirts.

"We (officers and sponsors) have been working harder to be more structured and organized," explained Delaney. Other officers include Julia Langworthy, president; Andrew Hendley, treasurer; and Megan Irish, secretary. Cynthia Feagan is the new co-sponsor. Both the sponsors and the officers spent exceptional amounts of time improving the program. As Carbaugh stated, "We are having more meetings and there is more involvement than ever."

New Approach

On the surface the four STUCO officers seemed light-hearted, fun-loving, and carefree. But their friendly, political personalities shielded their determination and desire to promote a positive attitude throughout the school. Not only did they achieve leadership, but they also were responsive to the enlarged student body. These two accomplishments helped student council to continue as a powerful and important institution at East.

Through increased organization and emphasis on the duties of each member, the council actively met its obligations. Because the student council meetings were held during one hour of the school day once a week, the members were able to take care of more business than they had in the past when the school meetings were held before school. "The debates and discussions really made people think about what was best for the school," commented senior class president Marc Erickson. By working together on the basis of consensus, the council was able to change the dates and formats of dances, lead successful charity drives, and offer an atmosphere that was concerned with national issues. By introducing and promoting a national petition to urge the United States Government to educate Americans about nuclear arms and warfare, the Stuco officers demonstrated their ability to offer leadership within the school and on a national scale.

The officers also maintained their role as the voice of the students. "They were aware of the issues in the school and were mature in dealing with the problems," stated Dr. Sigman. When the administration changed the schedule of the traditional dances, the officers worked diplomatically with them to reach an agreement between adults and students. It was hoped that the more formalized dances (being held the night after the game) would attract a larger attendance because most students said they wanted to keep the traditional formalities. However, those who "dropped in" were scarce. The WPA dance had a very poor turnout with approximately seven couples speckling the dance floor at any one time. "Only a total of 250 students showed up," said Jim Lockard, STUCO supervisor.

Another weak turnout occurred at the polls. Relatively few people chose to vote for the elections: Homecoming Queen, WPA King, Sweetheart Queen, and sophomore and freshman class officer elections. Next year Stuco plans to increase its publicity in order to draw more students to the polls.

It is easy to criticize a government that is burdened by many obligations. Being outside observers instead of inside workers, students often judge without realizing the activities which take place and the accomplishments that are made. Often, what looks glamorous and prestigious is actually frustrating and laborious. The 1986-87 Student Council appeared nonchalant and stress-free, but they worked hard as a unit to improve our surroundings and spirit. With Steve Jenkins, STUCO president, guiding the council, STUCO led a productive and prosperous year.

Tradition Reigns

The moment the Pep Band hit its first note, Dr. Marlin Stanberry escorted last year's Homecoming Queen, Sally Riekhof, down the track, with the Drill Team and Heralders ceremoniously following behind. This commenced the 1986-1987 Homecoming ceremony.

The announcer introduced the fifteen nominees and their escorts as they strolled down the track, with the Drill Team and taffeta and lace, anxiously smiled as the biting November breeze blew the balloons dangling above each candidate. The music stopped, and the announcer declared the Homecoming Queen's court — Fourth attendant, Beth Jennings, Third attendant, Megan Irish, Second attendant, Betsy Robertson, and First attendant, Kristen Hammond.

After the cheering stopped, the crowd was silent until Heather Kolb was announced the 1986-1987 Homecoming Queen. The bleachers were a blur of clapping and cheering while Sally Riekhof crowned the new Queen. The elegance of the ceremony clashed with the swampy football field where the Lancers beat Leavenworth 12-0.

The traditional preparations were made with the Homecoming assembly held during school where the candidates were first introduced. Commenting on her nomination, Beth Jennings said, "I had always looked up to the girls who were nominated, and then it was me! It was really exciting." The reigning Homecoming Queen, Heather Kolb, said, "It will definitely make high school more memorable."

This year's second traditional ceremony was the Sweetheart ceremony. The lacy pink decorations were intertwined throughout the gym.

Each girl and her escort were introduced by the Pep Club President, Jeff Hopkins. Whitney Jones, Girl's Pep Club President then began to announce the Queen's court — Fourth attendant, Kristin Deeter, Third attendant, Kristy Frank, Second attendant, Shelley Erickson, and First attendant, Julie Dick. At the peak of the excitement, Julie Dibble was crowned Sweetheart Queen.

The game was followed by an after party in the cafeteria with the music from the Student Council officers.

"Everything was so exciting and so special," explained the Sweetheart Queen, Julie Dibble; "all I could think of saying was, 'Wow!'"

SADD Clowns Volunteer Laughs

Shawnee Mission East prides itself on being a school that is well known not only for its academic strengths but also for its good standing in the community.

Two strong organizations that help encourage this at East are ESP and SHARE. ESP stands for the East Service Project, which emphasizes the need for volunteer work around the city. SHARE, Students Helping in Areas Related to Education, is a club that works within the school, promoting school spirit. Both activities have proven beneficial for both the student body and the community by having the students helping others instead of themselves.

ESP promotes school spirit throughout the community. In only its second year, ESP, which is now 204 strong, has gained respect from various organizations around the city. Mrs. Tammy Kelly, the head of ESP, has always felt it important to give back to the community some of what we get out of it by volunteering. By working with ESP for the past two years, Kelly has accomplished this and much more. The advisers are presently trying to computerize their system so that they can gain access to any organization according to the students' interests. For example, students who are interested in children can volunteer at The Children's Place, St. Michael's Day Care, Kaleidoscope, or the Learning Exchange. As Justin Hibbard, junior, commented, "Not only is it an excellent learning experience, but I really enjoy working with the kids." Another option that has become part of ESP is clowning with the Red Cross, a program headed by Lynne Eaton. The clowns head out to area nursing homes on the weekend or on various holiday parades and entertain people. One aspect of the program that attracts many of the students is that a notation of their accomplishments is placed on their transcript after they have volunteered 45+ hours. Kim Wallace, a senior who has earned over 100 hours with ESP by volunteering at Shawnee Mission Medical Center, commented, "I really enjoy working out there. It leaves me with a good feeling about myself, knowing that I'm helping other people out."

While ESP focuses upon the community, SHARE strives mainly to promote school spirit. Because of the freshmen and the tragedies which have occurred, SME has witnessed a rejuvenation within the SHARE Club. Students Against Drunk Driving, better known as SADD, Big Brother/Big Sisters, the SHARE Ambassadors, and the SHARE Greeters all comprise the club. SADD has come into the spotlight lately to the bittersweet joy of the sponsor, Mrs. Atkinson. The club, which is an active part of SHARE, strives to increase student knowledge of the tragic repercussions of drinking and driving. Mrs. Atkinson focuses upon the thrust of the group; "SADD isn't a club whose main concern is how many meetings are held, but it is concerned that people make an active decision not to drink and drive."

Big Brother/Big Sisters were initiated mainly for the incoming freshmen. The program, begun by senior Betsy Robertson, is new to the SHARE organization this year. One senior is assigned four or five new students and during that summer gets to know them. The program met with enthusiasm even in its first stages. Betsy Robertson, SHARE Executive, commented, "ESP and SHARE really help! People here don't see the long term effects. It's the community that reaps the rewards."

FRUSTRATION

Sheweenk, pid-pid. Sheweenk, pid-pid. Squeaky, old windshield wipers fighting a losing battle against the continuous rain was the only noise that dared to rupture the silence as the football team traveled to North Stadium for a district game against Harmon. The rain so occupied the thoughts of the players that some would contend that it was a twelfth man. Not only did it postpone two games, an unheard of proposition in the sport that is never stopped, but it also affected the play of three other games.

The fight being waged on the windshield eerily paralleled the fight the team waged all year. Just as the wipers never gained any ground on the rain, the team had trouble distancing themselves from opponents. With admirable workmanlike traits, they would make solid defensive stands or put together an impressive drive only to be undone by big plays from their opponents. Head Coach Stiegemeier emphasized this point and blamed it on a lack of speed. Also, he felt that the inability to put away games was due to complacency, which was a source of frustration for him and the team.

Such was the case in the first two games where the team suffered defeats at the hands of Northwest and Lawrence. The lopsided scores were not indicative of the play of the Lancers, Coach Stiegemeier noted. So, despite the losses, the gridders were enthusiastic about their future. They looked optimistically to their next opponent, Olathe North, unaware that another opponent, Mother Nature, was also suiting up for the coming game.

They began the Olathe game under tempestuous skies, and midway through the first quarter, Olathe North jumped ahead on a long breakaway run. Then, as if to signal some disapproval, the clouds opened up and rain gushed forth. Once it began, the hard driving rain never faltered. The teams futilely played out the first half and retired to the locker room to prepare for the second half, they thought. In the interest of player safety, the second half was postponed. The grand old sport will never be the same. There was now a dent in its invincible facade that the combined efforts of over-protective mothers and all the soccer players in the world could never produce.

Unfortunately, the football team also seemed adversely affected when they lost the game on Monday. Tempers flared; the success that so many players expected, counted on, was not coming. It hurt. Frustrations surfaced as the team had an emotional fall-out. With six games left to play, people were pointing fingers. It seemed like sure disaster, but the seniors stepped in and emotionally repatched the team. As Mike Rozell said, "Sometimes something drastic has to happen before you will change. That time really brought us together and improved our play." The following West game was postponed until Monday, again due to the rain. In the game, the defense looked strong. Offensively, they scored the first touchdown of the season.

Now that they had tasted the end zone, the Lancers wanted more. Against Leavenworth, they drove eighty yards on the first possession despite being outweighed almost fifty pounds per man. They finished the game victorious and continued their winning ways the following week against North.

The Lancers headed into State District competition with the leading Sun Country rusher in Mike Rozell, and a renewed optimism about a playoff berth. But, Harmon and the rain saw otherwise as the Lancers lost on a soaked field. A loss the following week to Blue Valley put the Lancers out of contention.

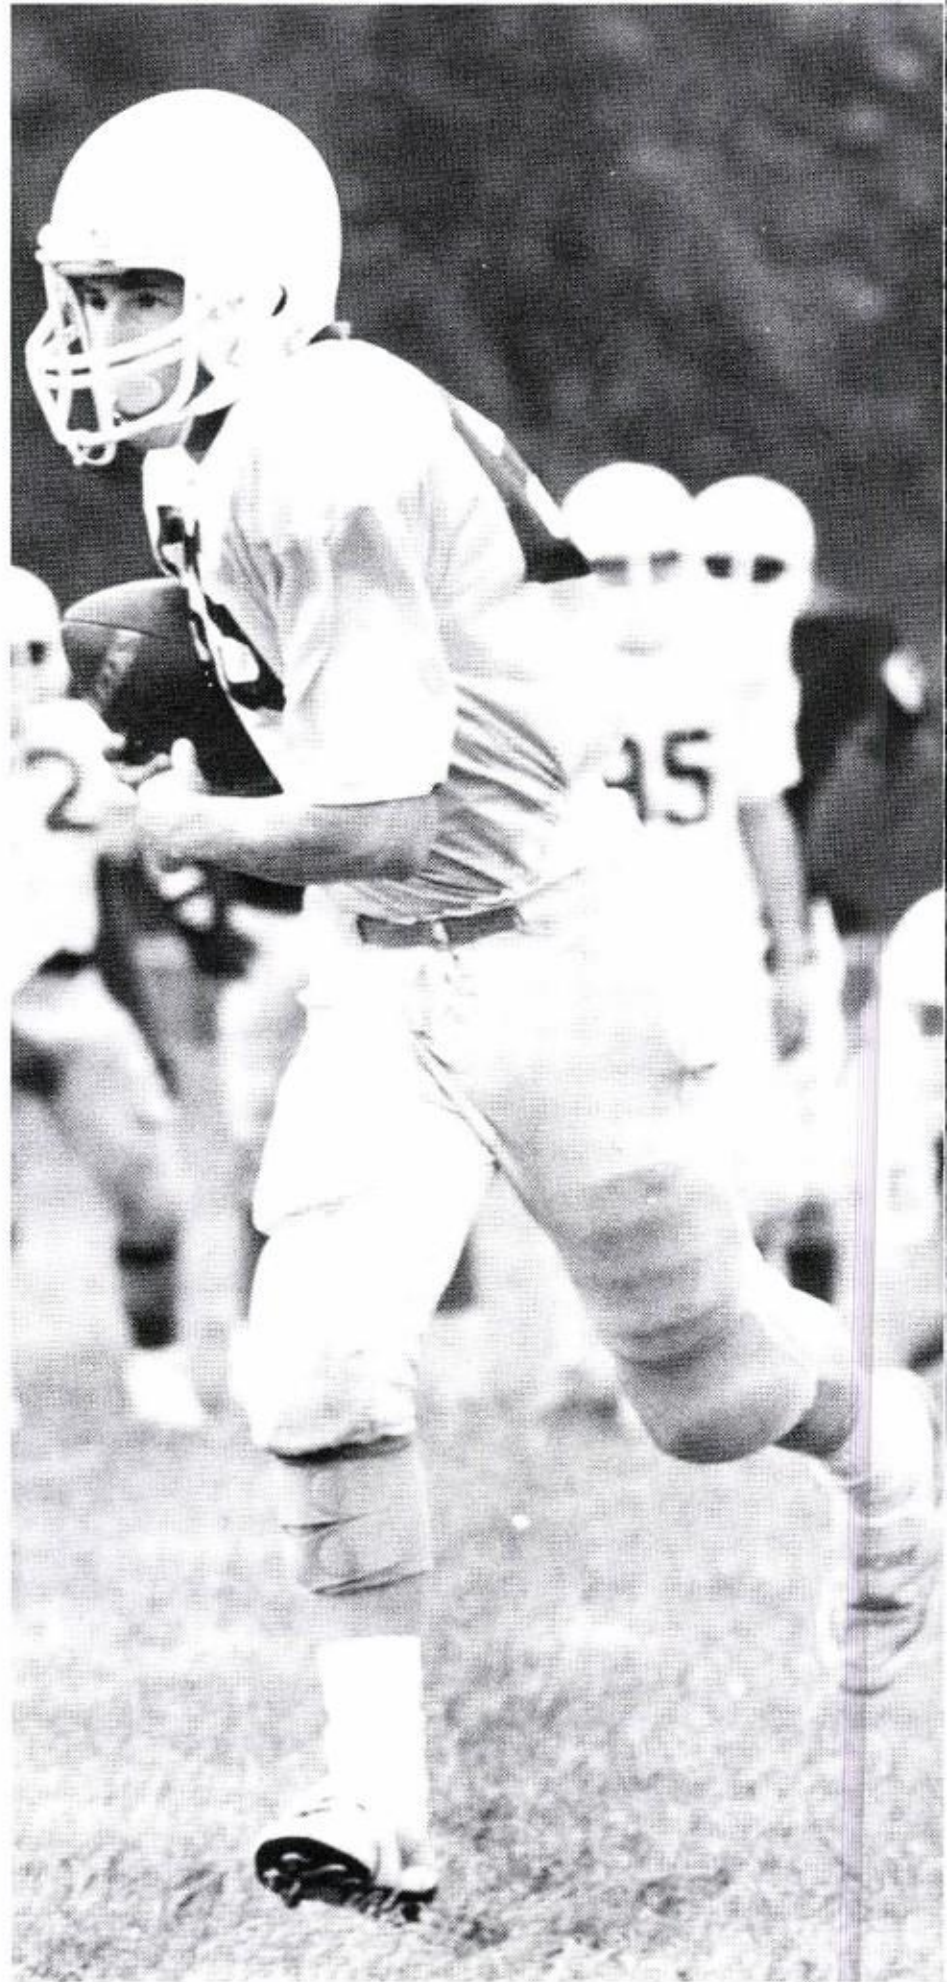

Although they lost a chance at the playoffs, the team never lost any of its character. Richard Muller explained, "The season was somewhat disappointing in the light of last year's success, but at the same time, I'm not unhappy with the way we played. Everyone on the team worked and fought hard. We never let down."

PLAYING TOUGH; HAVING FUN

Swampy fields, rained out games, painful drills, difficult three-hour practices, good coaching and overall excellence — the soccer season. With the incoming freshman class and the new coaching, the soccer program changed; there were four teams and schedules, five coaches, and ninety players. Coach Rees stated, "This is the largest quantity of soccer experience we have ever had. The combination is producing a thriving program."

With the arrival of three new enthusiastic coaches, many of the players' outlooks on the game completely changed. "Formerly we just kicked the ball around," laughed Brad Levene. However, this year the typical practice for the soccer team consisted of "suicides," "perimeter increasers" and "the circuit," a series of drills such as twisters, elevator push-ups, wheel barrows, crab walks, leg throws, and other intense exercises. "At the beginning, we were gasping for air, but by the end of the season, we were all in top shape," explained Levene. Chris Bay, captain of the varsity soccer team added, "Our team got in a lot better shape this year."

Not only were there changes in the practices, but coach Bryan Williams incorporated a new strategy, with his 4-4-2 line-up; he said, "It showed me the strengths of the team." Williams affirmed, "Now with the great deal of improvement, they have been able to pull together as a team. They can put more effort into the game. Just because there is more hard work and effort doesn't mean the game will be less fun — it will be more fun."

Junior varsity coach Ray DeQue also stressed simply enjoying the game of soccer. He said, "If they aren't having fun, they can't play. Once you are uptight or nervous, you lose confidence in yourself." Commenting on the j.v. team, Sebastian Kuelps predicted. "The performance of the j. v. team has been at a very upgraded level which will result in a great varsity team next year."

The season concluded with the Lancers placing third in the Sunflower League championship. Coming back from their losses, the team won its regional on November 1. The overall record for the varsity team was 12-6-4.

Coach Rees said, "The sport now attracts three times the participants, and the quality of skills and play have steadily improved every year."

TAKING IT IN STRIDE

What does a 30¢ White Castle burger have to do with the 1986 Lancer volleyball season? Nothing in particular, but what seems mediocre at first quickly becomes exceptional to those who have become familiar with the product.

The varsity team got off to a strong start by capturing first place at the JCCC invitational tournament, something never before accomplished by East. But the success was as short-lived as a single White Castle in the hands of a very hungry person. Shortly after the JCCC win, the team slipped into a nine game losing streak. The team questioned itself and its losses at times but remained undaunted. Senior Jennifer Sanks analyzed the problem: "We got into a slump and quit playing as a team. We felt like six separate individuals. But we managed to pull together, talk a lot more, and play as a team. We finally beat South."

This victory against South came during the league tournament where East placed third. At the substate competition, East failed to defeat South and did not qualify for state competition. Senior Julie Dick said, "It's pretty disappointing that we didn't go to State, but it's the effort and teamwork that count. The last couple of weeks we really pulled together; I don't think anyone is upset. We played our best. What more can you ask for?"

Overall, the team managed a 16-14 record for the year. Considering that many lettermen graduated and that a new head coach took over, the team deserves nothing less than a 21-White Castle salute.

NOT JUST A TEAM

Friday, October 24, 1986: the Sunflower League meet was held at Shawnee Mission Park. Mist hung in the air. The clouds refused to succumb to the sun. Wind whipped through the runners' singlets and an icy chill ran down their backs. Seniors Bo Criss, Steve Mayer, and Will Hancock jogged aimlessly around the course to warm up, but they were halted by the arrival of the lead runner in the current race, the first link in the long chain of girls. The boys stopped to cheer on their racing teammates and stayed until the last one had passed. The race continued: up a hill, through a mud puddle, over a gaping trench; then finally, the end could be seen in the distance. The rapidly forming tunnel of spectators lining the course on either side of the finish line roared to life with cheers. The boys, back from warming up, were waiting to assist and congratulate the on-coming runners as they wove through the chute after crossing the line.

Someone was always there to cheer. Someone was always there as a running partner. Someone was always there to help others through the rough spots. Someone was always there.

Before meet high-carbohydrate dinners, group stretching and breathing, and group expeditions to find the "Johnny on the Spot" at meets led to exceptional team unity and spirit. The older runners encouraged this unity, setting an example for the underclassmen. Freshman Linda Long observed, "We were inspired by the juniors and seniors and tried to work as hard as they did. They taught us a lot about being a team." Running in groups after school as well as in the meets contributed to this feeling. "We're all friends, so we're a real team, even at practice. The hard days aren't as bad because we have fun together," senior Nikki Pender explained.

In addition to the usual training, such as the "track work-out," sets of 800's, "long run," anything over seven miles, and "easy three," reserved for the day before the meet, a new technique was introduced: the "steady state." The new timed run required participants to run steadily at or near race pace for four miles. Also, the traditional "Fontana fun runs" were started one block farther from the top of Fontana. Both coaches agreed that these changes were beneficial to the season. Englund commented, "I think that 'steady state' is a good idea. I like it. It's more controlled, more easily measured."

Each individual meet was a learning experience. Both boys and girls raced against the tougher Missouri schools most of the season. The girls, who ran two miles at State, ran five kilometer (3.1 miles) meets until Sunflower League, where they placed third. The boys too ran 5K in these meets; they also ran this distance at State. The year's experiences and training were aimed at helping the teams in the State meet. "We didn't meet with great success through the earlier meets since we were training for State," senior Bo Criss explained, "(but) I believe each of us grew both mentally and physically." The boys' team, captained by Criss, finished the season by placing fourth at Regionals and seventh at State. The girls, led by senior Susan Hedrick, placed second at Regionals and sixth at State.

Girls' coach John Haraughty thought the season went very well. Despite the many injuries and illnesses, the overall scores were more consistent. "We're deeper this year," Haraughty explained; "plus our juniors have taken up the slack when the seniors were out. We're just a better team this year, attitude-wise and together-wise." Englund added, "We're an older team; more experienced."

Respect

"I wonder how much limousine service to State would cost?" mused Coach Carolyn Howard as she loaded the van that was to take the girls' tennis team to that final and most important competition of the season.

The team managed to scrape by with a few wins this season: both the varsity and junior varsity teams were undefeated. In fact, the girls' tennis team has proven itself to be one of the best teams the school has to offer. Yet, how many of us can honestly say we've been to a tennis match?

"Tennis really doesn't get the kind of support it deserves, and tends to be overshadowed by other sports, even though it is the most consistently successful fall sport," remarked senior Kelly Nawroth. Junior Deborah Butts said, "I can understand that most of the support goes to the traditional sports, like football, but it would be great if a new tradition of supporting the tennis team was made."

The team's record is an indication of the respect and attention the players deserve. They captured trophies in several major tournaments, including the Shawnee Mission District Tournament, the Regional Competition, and, for the eighth year in a row, the Sunflower League Tournament (a feat accomplished by no other team). For their victory at Regionals, the team acquired (for the second consecutive year) the Regional Team Trophy Championship. Once again they qualified all six players for State, which is the maximum number allowed to attend from any school. In singles competition, sophomore Lisa Denton placed fifth, while junior Karen Kaufman was tenth. In doubles, senior Kelly Nawroth and freshman Buffy McLincy were second, while senior Linda Weisenborn and junior Deborah Butts placed ninth.

"We've always had a good team with quality and depth," remarked Howard. "The girls played very well at State and were one of the few teams to place all six players in the top ten."

Although the band may not play at every match, the tennis team has earned the respect of the students. Meanwhile, Carolyn Howard will be shopping for a limo service.

“Goof” Balls

“Your feet are pointed in the wrong direction, you goofball. And distribute your weight evenly!” Kathy Klein, senior, yelled at Anne Schoofs, freshman. Although these words sounded harsh to others playing nearby, she did not really mean them. This was merely her way of expressing her opinion. As Schoofs made a letter-perfect chip onto the green, Klein cried out, “Oh my God, NO!!” Klein had managed to pass some of her wisdom and experience to Anne Schoofs and the other underclassmen to help them out, just as she had been helped years before.

The girls’ golf team had both experience and depth which made for a very strong team. Of the top six varsity players, Dana Chase, junior, Mary Ann Gustello, junior, Ann Hall, senior, and Kathy Klein were all returning lettermen with the other two, Ann Durham, senior, and Anne Schoofs, lettering this year. Schoofs has shown herself to be a promising future player as the only freshman on varsity and also the first freshman to receive a letter at East. The only complaint Anne had was that “people don’t call me Anne; they just call me Freshman.”

Norris Stauffer, who has coached girls’ golf for fourteen years, found that the up-perclassmen’s experience helped them stay calm. They made an outstanding showing at Regionals at the Overland Park Golf Course where they took first place over South by fifty-four strokes. Klein was the first place medalist with an eighty-two and her chortling “LA LA LA,” with Durham and Hall taking a close third and fourth respectively.

By making such a good show at Regionals, the team managed to qualify five of their six, going to Emporia for State. At State, the team took second overall, with Chase taking eighth and Hall taking a close ninth.

Their many hours of practice paid off with their final record for the year: winning nine tournaments and losing only three. Klein, Custello, Hall, and Chase were very competitive, giving the team four strong players rather than one dominate one.

Hall and Klein would both like to continue with golf at college — if not competitively, then recreationally. As Hall commented, “You can either face it as competition against yourself or against other people, so it gives you a variety of ways to play the game.”

The Unforgettables

What many people remember years down the road is a team's record, how they placed, or what awards and championships they won. The unforgettable events for the Lancer gymnastics team, however, were special diversions from the usual well worn path.

The East gymnastics team was proud to claim the largest number of participants in the Shawnee Mission District. As Art Newcomer stated, "If we compete well, the important thing becomes the fact that we have a lot of kids participating and getting involved. That is the key to a successful program."

The team consisted of eighteen members, seven of whom competed on the varsity level. Stephanie Kieltyka, captain, said that her "unforgettable" occurred during the meet against North and West. "We were so awesome. We performed better than we ever had. We hadn't competed for a week, so we were well rested and calm. North had really good equipment, and Danielle Moore went on to place first and Kristin Butcher fourth." Kieltyka also scored well to place third. With these three strong individual performances, the team came out with a second place ranking. Coach Laurie Sallas was especially pleased with the girls because the team goal was to score ninety-five points, and they surpassed that to score a ninety-eight.

Sallas summarized the season by saying, "Even though we weren't the number one team, our result was a lot of hard work and a lot of fun." "Losing made us hold together as a team and helped us to develop close friendships," said Kieltyka. Sallas taught us to have fun but at the same time compete seriously."

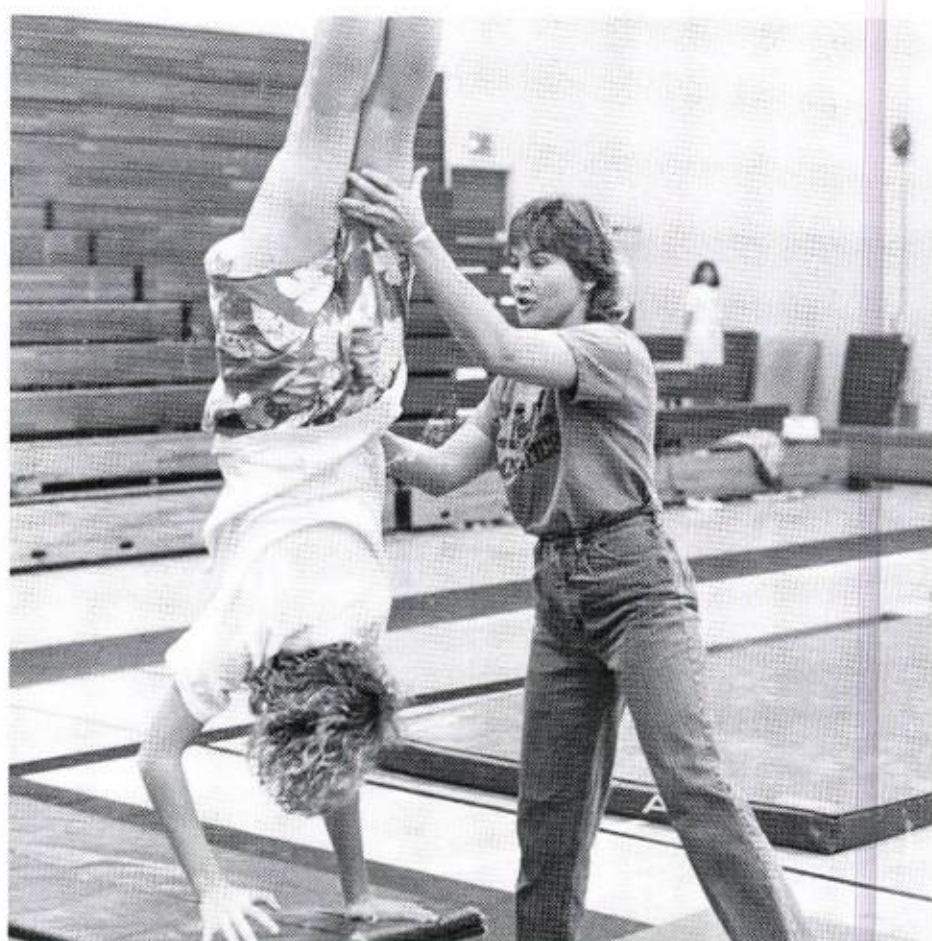

Together the gymnasts kept their heads high when the competition was fierce, and they developed an attitude of going out, doing their best, having fun, and competing against themselves. "Laurie taught us to work hard to meet our goals, but more importantly I think we learned that our main purpose in gymnastics was not to win but to have fun, make friends, and be involved," stated senior Julia Langworthy. Clearly the key to this year's season was the team members' ability to look beyond winning, placing, and receiving awards, to focusing on the unforgettable events such as unity, friendship, and individual success.

Close Calls

Junior guard Doug Flint came out of the crowd with the ball and began to dribble his way up the court with a mere seven seconds left and the game knotted at 60 points. He eluded one opponent, then glanced quickly at the clock as he passed halfcourt. Quickly he dished a pass to teammate John Smith, who was crouched in his shooting stance. Smith received the pass and lifted up from seventeen feet. As the buzzer echoed throughout the gymnasium, the ball split the net after entering the rim. The Lancers had defeated arch-rival SM South 62-60.

The basketball team was involved in several nail-biting games this season. For example, their first loss of the season came at the hands of Blue Valley, who, at once time, was ranked number one by the KC Times/Star. They then lost a thriller at home against the undefeated Hawklets of Rockhurst by three points. In the middle of the season, the Lancers captured third in the Shawnee Heights Tournament. They beat Blue Valley North by a single point in the first round, but fell to the second ranked Manhattan Indians in the semifinals. In the third place game, East crushed Topeka Seaman by 17 points.

One of their definite strengths was height. "With John Smith at 6'6", Scott Smith at 6'7", and Mark Zinn at 6'5", we have got a size advantage on people," said Russ Kokruda as quoted from the Harbinger. "Our height has helped us out because we have outrebounded our opponents and in clutch situations we can go inside when we need points," said senior John Smith.

The team was close, in part, because the majority of the players had played together the two previous years. The returning seniors were Blaine Degnan, Chris Jehle, David Rismiller, Greg Scott, John Smith, and Mark Zinn. Other key players included juniors Doug Flint and Scott Smith, with Greg Zuanich the most improved player.

The Lancers finished the season with definite sportsmanship. In substate they beat out Harmon in double overtime and a final score of 87 to 83. The following night the Lancers challenged Wyandotte, ranked fourth in the city. The score wobbled back and forth the entire game until the clincher when the remaining five seconds, and East down by one point, produced no basket. Blaine Degnan summarized the final game: "We were strong as a team, but the score wasn't what it should have been."

Court Magic

The Question: What has Girls' Basketball done for East? The Answer: quit a bit. Although it has obvious worth as a conversation topic as students stand in the halls, rush from one place to another, or chat over lunch, the sport contributes more to life at East. As the only winter sport with female participants, it provides an opportunity for these athletes to be involved in defending their school against its rivals. To be successful, members must work closely as a team. In doing so, new friendships are born and old ones strengthened. Like any sport, Girls' Basketball offers the chance for individuals to excel, developing their skills to their fullest extent.

The season as a whole had its ups and downs, much of this due to illness and injuries. The team's strength came from its aggressiveness and defense, especially its ability to steal the ball. "Our shooting was inconsistent," junior Josie McLaughlin explained, "but our defense made up for it." Originally, the team had several goals. One, to win both invitationals, was successfully fulfilled. For most of the season, others, like winning substate and state, seemed out of reach. Despite these doubts, the Lady Lancers won substate, defeating both Harmon and Shawnee Mission South. Coach Dave Rehfeld was optimistic as he explained his theory, "You should go for it all — if not, you're selling yourself short."

Senior Julie Dick led the Girls' Varsity Basketball team in its successful season. Of Dick's impact on the team, Rehfeld commented, "We have one of the best guards in the state. We need other people to come along and help her out." The results of any game were not solely derived from the efforts of one player, but from the compiled efforts of all team members. Dick's enthusiasm and skill spread to others.

During three early games, the KSHSA experimented with the three-point basket. "I like it," Rehfeld raved. "I recommended that we adopt it on a permanent basis." The three-point basket was shot from a distance of nineteen feet, nine inches, whereas the traditional two-point free-throw is shot from fifteen feet. Senior Julie Dick commented, "I always shoot from there now. It makes the game a little more interesting."

Another aspect new to Girls' Basketball this season was the addition of the freshman team. "It will make the program better over the years," Rehfeld continued. "It gives us one more year to work with them." The freshmen didn't just blindly fall into place as expected: they came up with a way to make practice more interesting. The team held a Special Olympics clinic on Wednesday, January fourteenth, for approximately forty children. Coach John Nickles explained, "They wanted to help those who had the courage to overcome any problems they (the children) might have." The girls seemed to have a magic touch, the ability to reach some of the more reluctant children — to get them to try. "They gave a little love and learned a lot about courage," Nickles continued. "It was an inspiring evening for all." Rough plans have been made for another clinic to be held next year by one of the girls' teams.

As the teams progressed, a new sense of togetherness developed. "We played more as a team — more united," McLaughlin ventured. All things considered, the season went well. Rehfeld reflected, "They're a scruffy bunch of kids; they really play hard and try hard."

GIRLS' BASKETBALL

Big, Bad And Bald

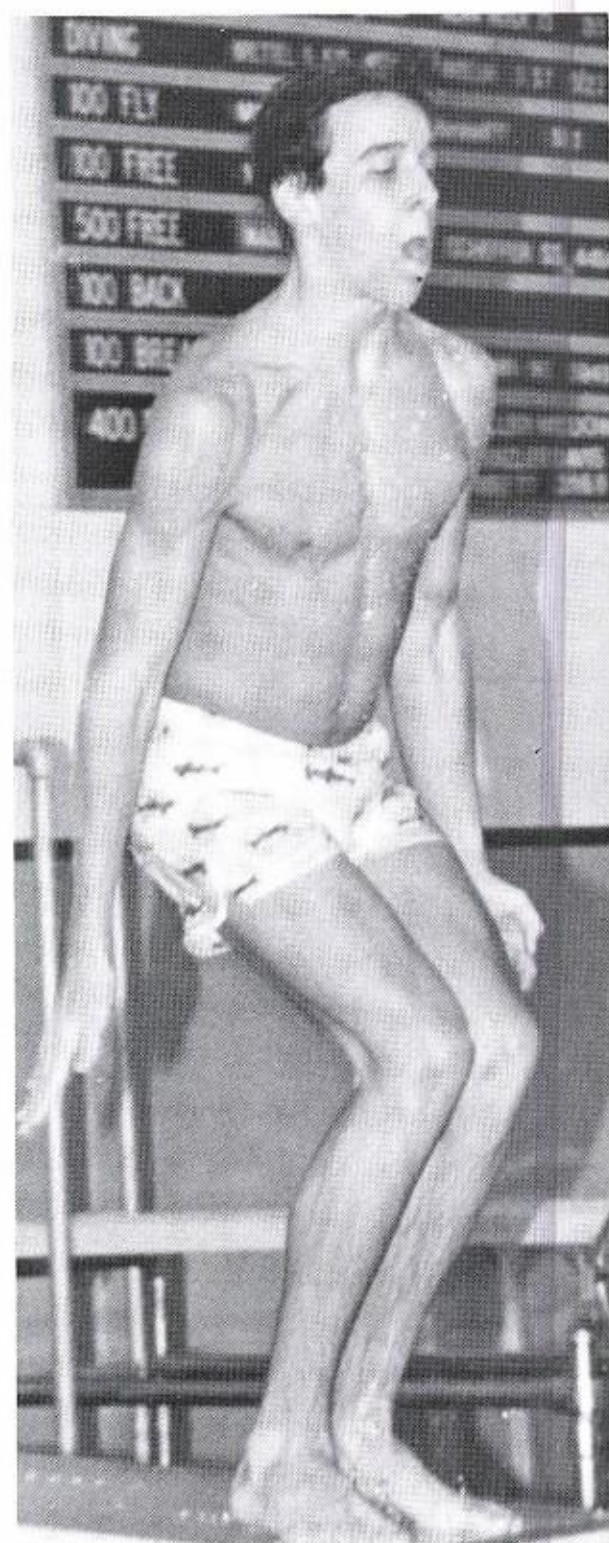

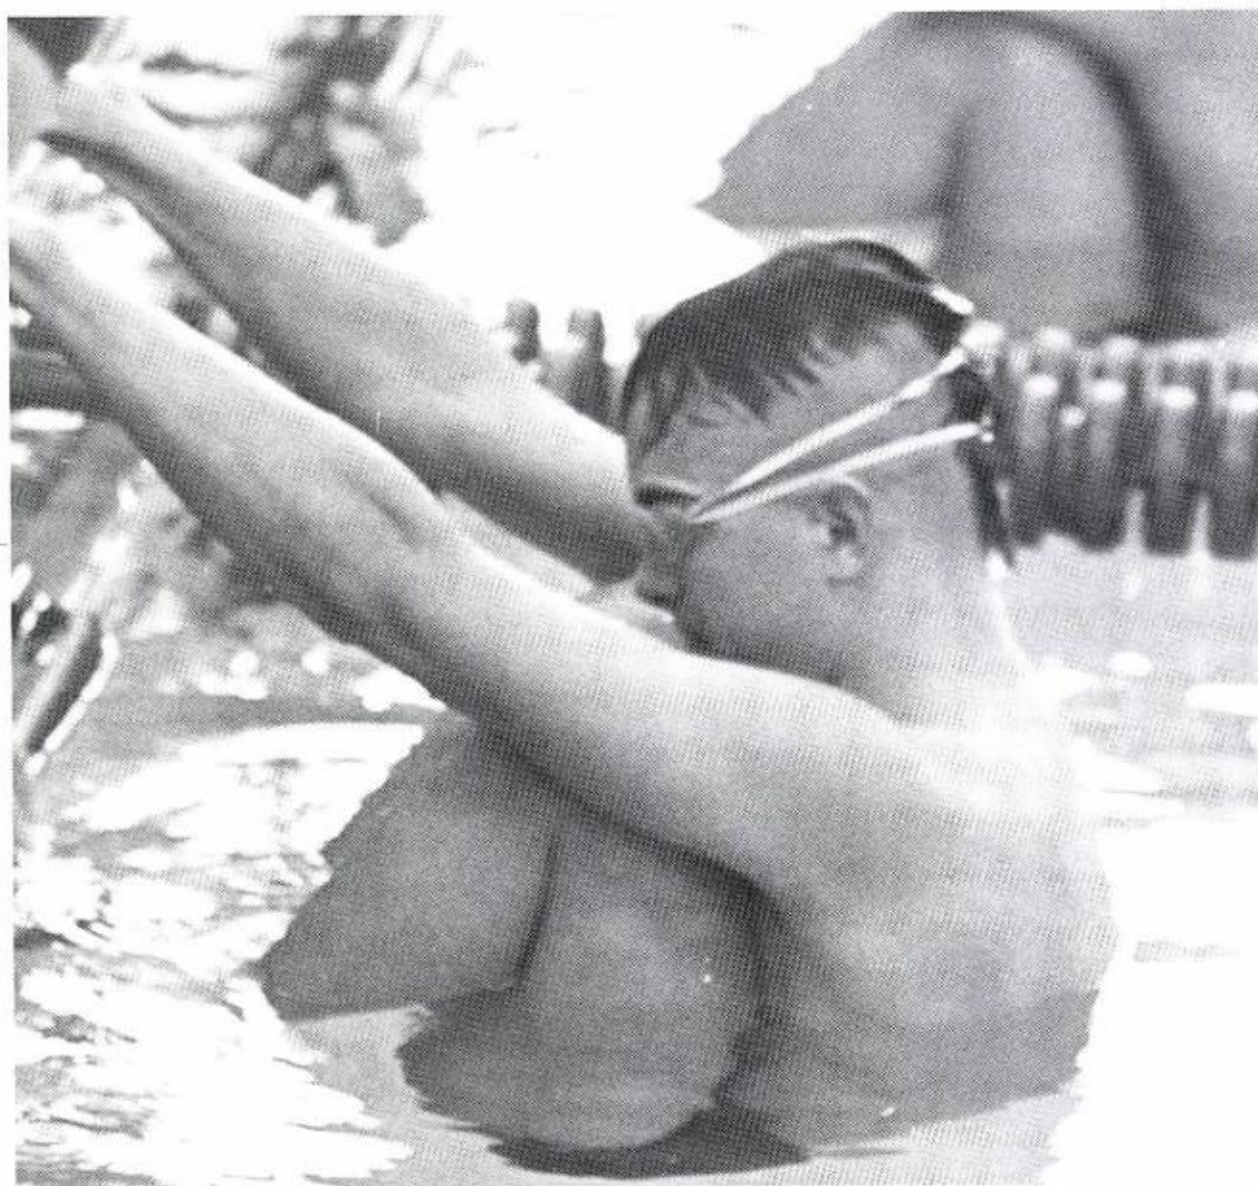

Heads turned and mouths were left open as sixteen ominous creatures were led onto the pool deck. Their mohawks screamed school spirit as the Lancer swimmers stood out in the crowd. Motivated by team leaders John Mussman, Greg Schoofs and Greg Windju, the swimmers were well represented at state. The competition proved threatening as many teams were comprised of national class athletes. However, the Lancer team was strong in numbers and swam up to their fearful reputation.

After a season of building, the team ruthlessly grabbed the Sunflower League Title. "This was a big accomplishment," said senior Greg Schoofs, "because we had so many young swimmers." East dominated the water as a Lancer swimmer was found in virtually every heat of each race. Their formidable reputation was uninterrupted as four swimmers were placed in the top of every event.

This powerful team with its strong reputation was built by the direction of Coach Wiley Wright. Being a high school as well as college swimmer himself, Coach Wright had the power to create the winning atmosphere that was so typical of the Lancer team. "This team belonged to Wiley," said senior Greg Schoofs. "He taught the new guys what swimming was all about." The swimmers agreed that Coach Wright gave them the confidence to bring out their best. The Lancer swimmers put in a good year's work and continued the ruthless image accented by their fearful mohawks.

BLUES BROTHERS

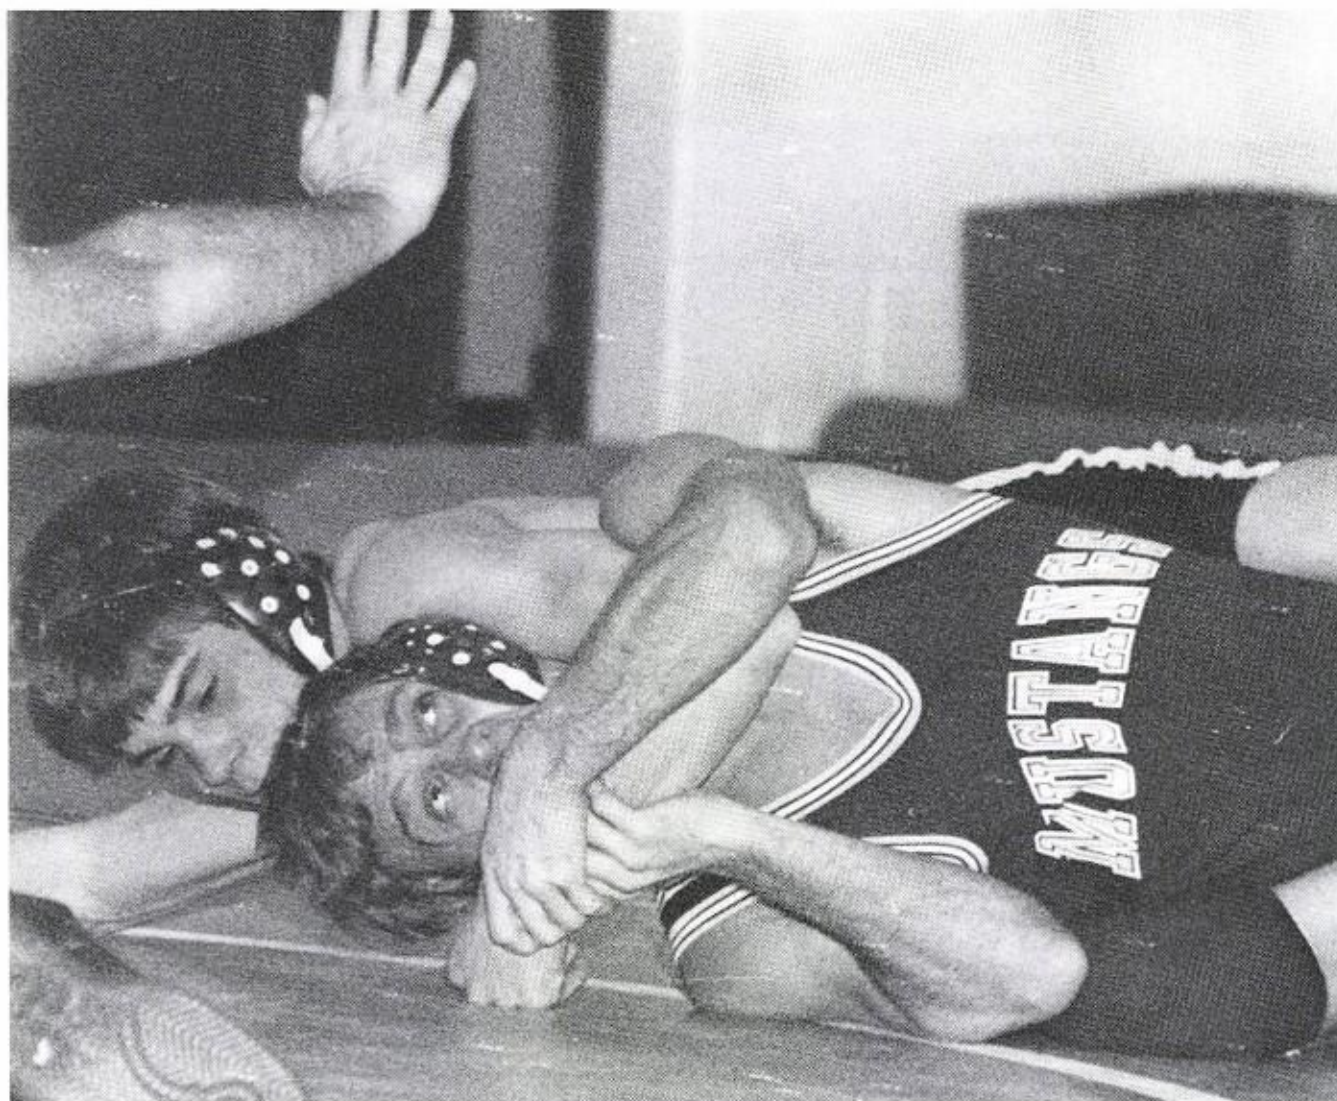

82 ... 83 ... The interval between pops increases as the wrestlers dig into a previously untapped resource of strength and endurance to complete their task. Sweat streams down their proud bodies that now seem sapped of all remnants of life as John Lee Hooker belts out a somewhat appropriate Blues tune. The song does not ring true because the wrestlers feel sorry for themselves, but because the sport is so demanding and often requires the serious introspection vital to all good Blues songs. Overcoming those physical and mental demands brings an enormous sense of pride to the athletes and serves to create a bond formed in adversity between the athletes that is so strong some would venture to call them Blues Brothers.

It would seem that this bonding process fell short of producing a successful team, but wrestling is more importantly an individual sport. So, despite winning only two dual meets, many of the wrestlers had impressive personal performances. To begin with, the addition of the freshman class brought the biggest turnout for the team in Coach Kramer's career. Space was a problem early in the season until previously excited athletes fell into the ranks of cold and timid souls who found wrestling was too much for them. For those who stayed, it was an educational year. Because the only returning varsity wrestlers were Captains Richard Muller and Marc Erickson, many young wrestlers got a chance to compete on the varsity level. The two captains, along with Jack Hausback and Pat Brown, provided many late season thrills as all four qualified for the State Tournament.

The work in the overheated wrestling room could not be understood by outsiders. For those not involved, it seemed foolish, almost masochistic, to push oneself to new, higher limits day after day. But, those on the outside will never know the sense of pride that arose from single-handedly overcoming and defeating an opponent of equal ability. So, despite the pain and sweat that went into building the season, one of the most profound memories was of the bus ride home from the last meet where the usual light conversation was halted by Matt Rapport's harmonica softly playing a familiar Blues tune. Each wrestler paused to reflect on his successes of the just completed season, ever respectful of this special brotherhood.

When The Cat's Away . . .

You know the feeling. You're sitting in class, bored out of your mind, wondering why your teacher is late for his own class. Suddenly, the door of the classroom opens and in walks a flustered, feeble-looking old woman. Yep, you guessed it. She's your substitute! Suddenly, you're not bored anymore. A malicious twinkle appears in your eyes. You chuckle to yourself. (Heh . . . heh . . . heh). You exchange knowing glances with your buddies, formulating your plan for attack. Then you . . . what? Just what are the most rotten, sneaky, low-down (in other words, best) tricks to play on a substitute?

A recent poll asked students to recall and relate the nastiest trick they know of that was ever played on a substitute teacher. Of course, there were the traditional gags: fake spiders in the desk, switching names, entire classes conspiring to begin coughing at once, whoopy cushions on the teacher's chair, as well as lines like "He usually lets us sit around and talk."

On the other hand, a few students (who wished to remain anonymous) demonstrated a high level of creativity in the tricks they've played on subs. Some examples: absolutely no one showing up for class, wrapping drafting string around all the desks in the room, and telling the sub that the class has to say the "Pledge of Allegiance" every day. One student recalled a substitute who was completely bald. While an accomplice distracted the sub, another wrote "Curly" on the blackboard directly above the gentleman's head. Another student recalled a truly mischievous bunch of fellows in a photography class who, when the sub left the room, spread rubber cement on a table and ignited the stuff. When the sub returned, she thought the table was burning!

One final note: Don't believe your parents when, after reading this article, they say in a shocked voice, "Why, in my day, we would never have done anything so disrespectful!" One student remembered a trick played by none other than her father. "When my dad was in school, he had a substitute who had been in a war and had shell shock. All the kids dropped their books on the floor at the same time, and the teacher crawled under the desk and wouldn't come out!"

A Jump On Life

Say the word "graduation" to a former Lancer and his eyes will glaze as he mentally leafs through the "fond memories" that linger on from his high school career. Say the word "graduation" to a first semester senior, however, and his eyes will sparkle with anticipation as, panting, he thinks, "Just a few more months 'til I'm outta here." For some of these seniors, the long-awaited liberation came even sooner — not in May, 1987, but in January: at the end of the first semester, approximately forty seniors graduated early.

For the past several years, the number of seniors graduating at semester has hovered around fifteen. Why, then, this year's whopping figure? Could it have to do with the crowded hallways, the altered parking lot, the presence of wide-eyed freshmen?

For some, the changes at East were a factor. Said Felicia Franklin, "With all the new stuff this year, it just made you want to hurry up and be done with it." Others, though, had simply had enough of the structure and confines of high school and were ready to move on: to college, to work, to independence.

In order to graduate early, the senior must have met all credit requirements, which some make up through courses at Johnson County Community College. Several graduates will take additional courses at JuCo which enable them to pursue their future interests. Laura Waldo, for example, is taking Spanish, in addition to other courses required for her college major, because she plans to travel to Barcelona, Spain, to study art. Although she left high school early, she will rejoin members of her class next year at the University of Kansas.

The early graduates returned for senior day and for commencement May 17.

Cleanliness Is Next To Godliness

"You make me sick!" The nasal twang reverberates around your skull until you too feel sick and are forced to look up from rearranging your already immaculate notebook to identify your accuser. This exclamation is a harsh and offensive assertion, but it is one that meticulously clean people often hear.

Although cleanliness is next to godliness, a person can get a lot of flack about it from the messy people in this world. That confrontation, clean vs. messy, goes back as far as Ranchers vs. Shepherders, Spartans vs. Athenians, or the Normal World vs. Skate Punks. Where cleanliness offers orderliness and planning, messiness gives impromptu freedom and some self-inflicted humor. Sloppy people can laugh at themselves while clean people get assignments in on time. Messies accumulate junk, while clean people keep their possessions streamlined to a basic format. Ultimately, the decision is personal and probably more subconscious than conscious, but it does provide an interesting insight into the values of people.

Together Again

"We get along a little better," said senior Heather Burgess in reference to her freshman sister, Joan. Because of the four year system, seniors were reunited in school with their freshmen siblings for the first time since 1981. "Strange" is the best word to describe the situation for many of these freshmen and seniors.

Among the seniors, the most commonly cited difference was the difficulty in leaving for school. As Jay Kapp explained, "The main thing is that I feel sort of like a parent because I have to wait for him (freshman Brent Kapp) in the morning." Burgess and senior Amy Parker also mentioned this problem, but Jamie Berg discovered the cause of the lateness; "Freshmen are always late because they have to try on 10 things before they can leave the house."

In addition, Berg mentioned the strange feeling of seeing his brother during the day. He didn't mind having John at school; he said, "It's only bad when I see him walkin down the hall wearing my clothes that I didn't know he borrowed." John was more enthusiastic about the situation and claimed, "It's kind of nice for me 'cause he drives me, and he showed me around before school started."

Some seniors were embarrassed by their freshman siblings and ignored them at school. But Jay Kapp didn't believe in discrimination against members of his own family and said hello to Brent every time he saw his brother. Unfortunately Brent was embarrassed Jay; "He never says hi back!"

But for the majority of senior-freshman teams, the change was an improvement. Besides getting along better, Burgess has had classes with her sister's friends and has come to know them better. Not all of the pairs have become closer friends, but as senior Jennifer Kaye said of freshman sister, Michelle, "At least I can keep an eye on her!"

I Have To Stay Awake

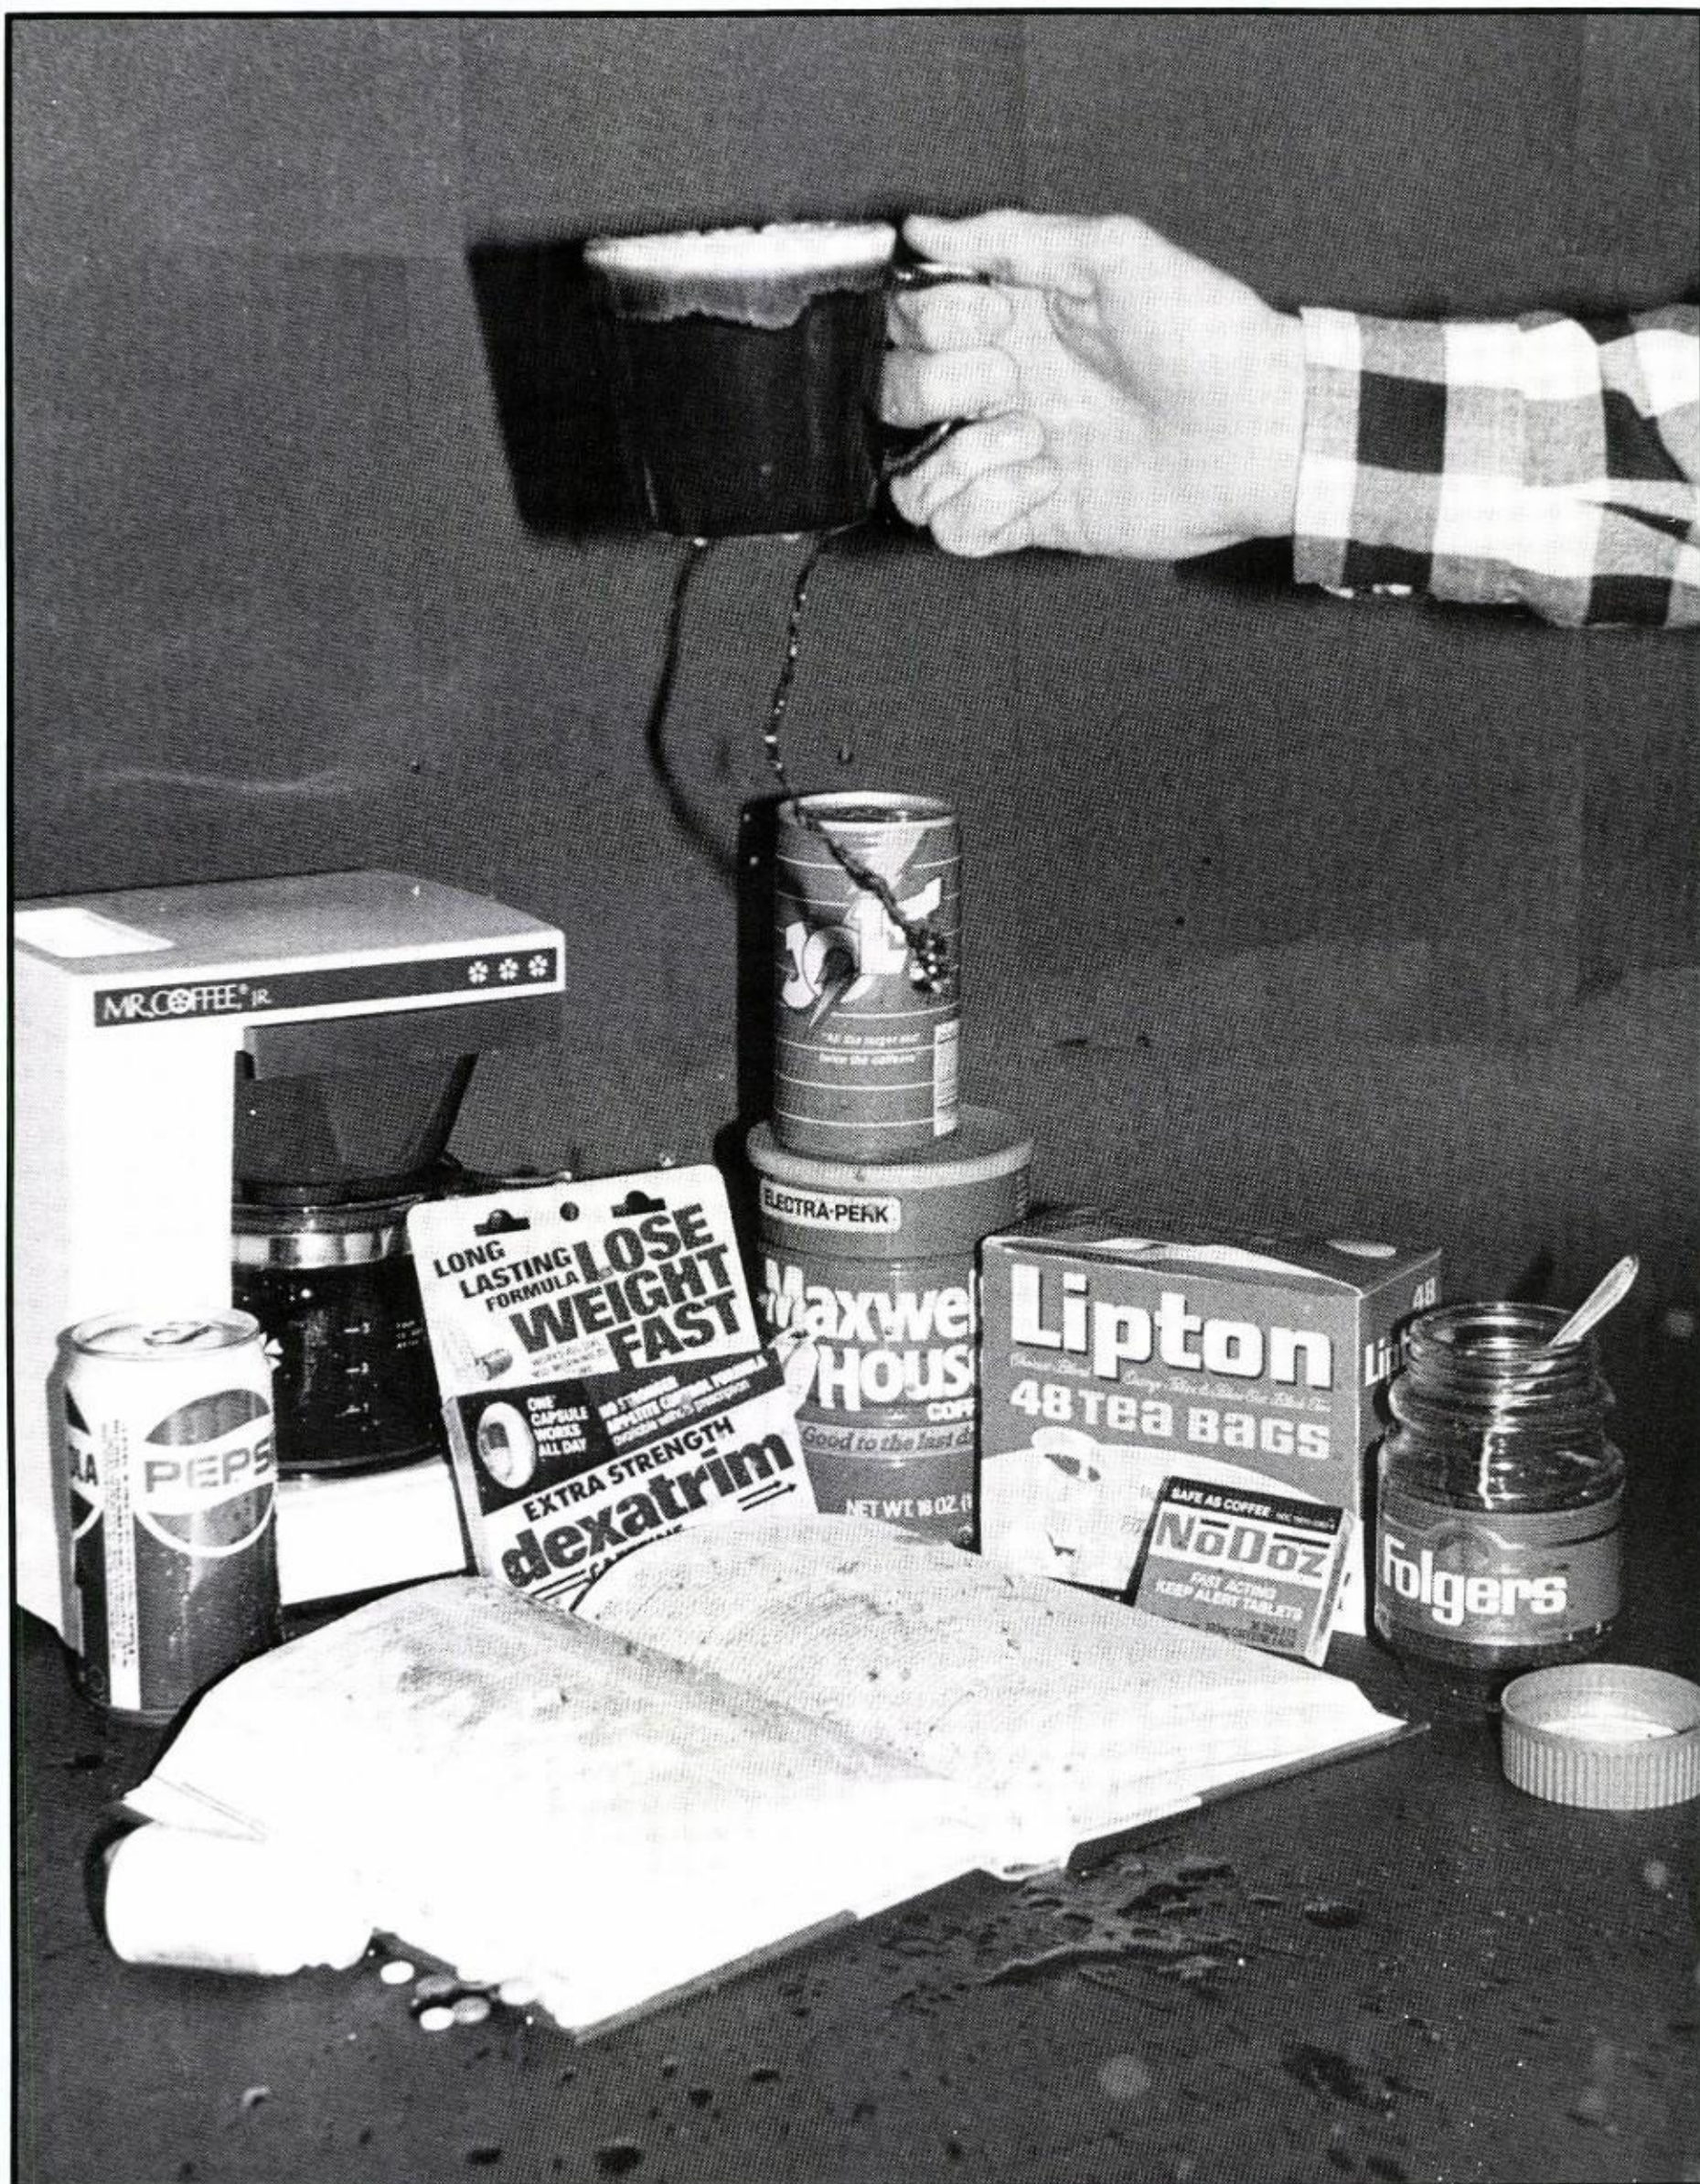

Yawn . . . I'm so tired. I have 45 more pages to study, two books to read, and 400 vocabulary words to memorize. How am I ever going to stay awake? My bed looks so inviting, so soft and warm. What can I do?

This dilemma happens to many people at least twice a year — once at the end of the first semester and again at the end of the year. How to stay awake? One option is to inject caffeine, a drug known for its stimulating, energy-giving effects. It is found in such products as Coke, chocolate, Vivarin, and coffee. These products make the body feel more awake and ready to tackle the theme begun at 10:30 on the night before it is due.

Asked how they stay awake, most people stated that they drink Diet Coke, or hot chocolate, or they eat M&M's and, in one case, pop tarts. Ellie Crow, senior, suggested the way to stay awak is to run around outside to keep the blood moving. Senior Jennie Delaney liked to sit in the bathtub and sip tea while she studies. Brian Matthys, senior, liked to watch David Letterman to keep from dozing off. Senior Kristen Hammond exclaimed, "I can't stay awake — my sleep is more important."

Even though most people complained about pulling an all-nighter more than half the people asked stated they did not even bother staying up; they just blew off the assignment and resigned to their pillows. Maybe if we started school around noon . . .

Death Stopped For Me

The 1986-1987 school year will be remembered not only as the year of the freshman, but also as the year of tragedy. For in three months, East lost five members of its immediate family: senior Lisa Schultz; graduates Paul Childs, David Bernard, and Tim Wyatt; and senior English teacher Everett Rees.

Nothing can be said to the relatives and close friends of the deceased that will erase their pain, yet to say nothing seems callous and unfeeling. So we clumsily express our sympathy, pretend we can understand how they feel, and mourn a little; but inevitably, we return to our routine of work, rest, anger, tears, and laughter. Yet a glance at an old picture, the reading of an autograph in a yearbook, or a conversation with a mutual friend can suddenly bring back memories and often the piercing realization that they are just that: memories.

What are our memories of Lisa, of Paul, of Tim, of David, of Mr. Rees? We remember, among other things, their vitality, their laughter, and trivial details like their favorite saying, their favorite movie, their favorite book, their favorite song. And, in remembering, we also realize how much we miss them. Those details, so insignificant, make all the difference.

We can impassively listen to hideous newstories of natural disasters in far off places where death tolls list faceless names that number in the hundreds or thousands, simply because the figures in their sheer greatness and frequency make the deaths incomprehensible. The death of one person whom we have met, have seen in the hallways, or have known by reputation alone, however, suddenly forces us to understand. Death, especially of one our age, makes us aware of our own impermanence; we see that even the easily-worn shell of youth will not protect our mortality.

Sydney Steoppleworth, in her eulogy at Mr. Rees's memorial service, quoted a line from Emily Dickinson. "I could not stop for death," she recited, "... so death stopped for me." We move so fast and so blindly, especially in our youth. This is perhaps the greatest lesson to be learned in high school: the knowledge that we take so much for granted. In our exuberance, we easily forget how fragile are the health of our family, our friends, ourselves.

-by Wendy Feng

B.F.F.

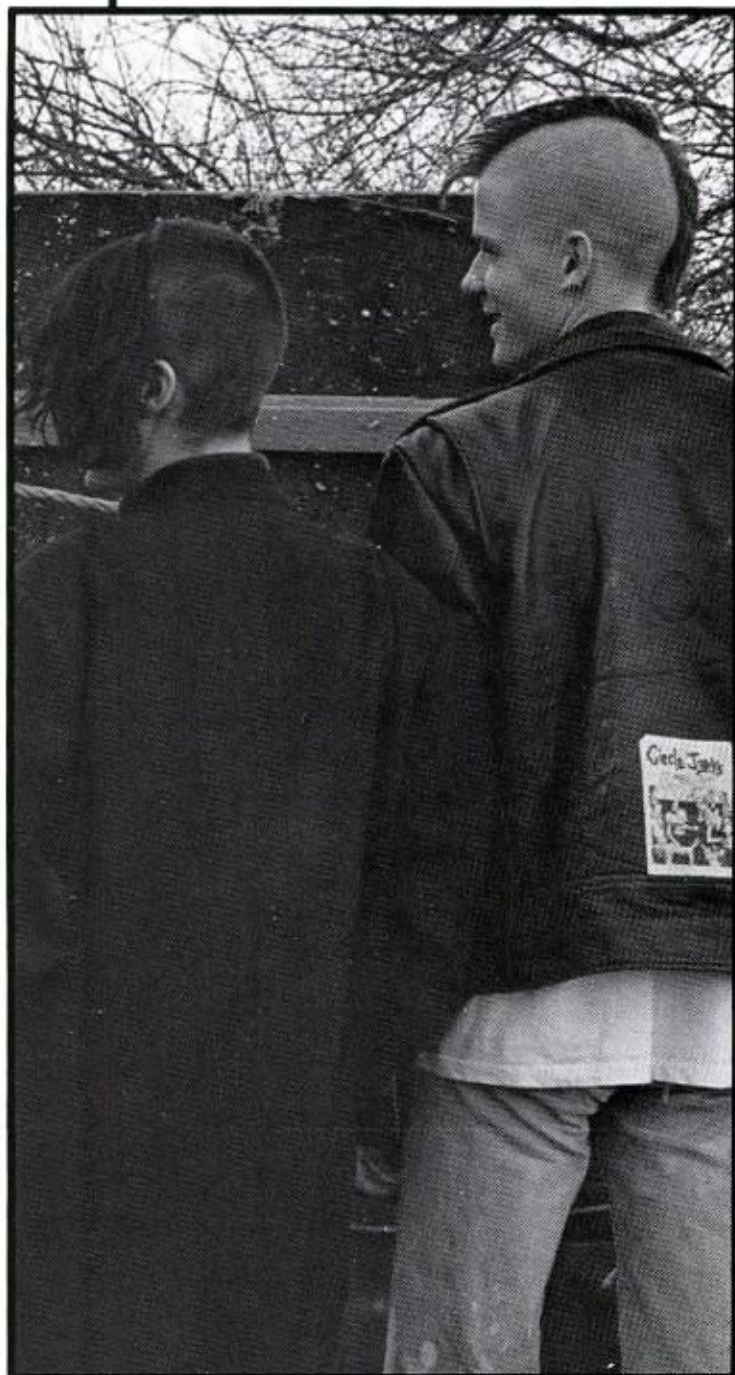

"Find a penny, pick it up, and all day long you'll have good luck. But if you give it to a friend, the luck it holds will never end." Friends—such an important part of our lives yet something so special that we also take it for granted. Everyone has his own little characterizations for a friend — someone who will always listen; someone who will understand; someone who's always there for you; someone you can have the time of your life with. "Friends are so important because they help you grow, and a true friend will never leave you," remarked senior Julie Dibble. It doesn't matter which emotional role a certain someone fills because the basic and necessary companionship exists in all. And surprisingly, one of the major binding forces between buddies is that dreaded institution, namely school, which can claim over seventeen years of our precious lives. Together we help each other through it, be it by making each other study for finals or trading lab reports. The social scene is one of the main reasons we show up at "The Home of the Lancers" day after day; besides, it's no fun to skip by yourself. School is practically our only real responsibility, and everyone is going through the same exhilarations and frustrations. That's one of the reasons high school and college friendships are so terrific — the level of honesty is so strong. Everything is open (disregarding all the hot gossip about what really happened at Joe Blow's New Year's Eve party), and you have no qualms over telling your friends the latest news in the family, personal, monetary, or employment area. In some ways it's expected — we simply know everything about each other. But once we step out into the real world, get a high-paying job or start a family of our own, all those small talk headlines instantly become private and known to only a very few. Perhaps that's expected too. For me it makes growing up seem rather boring. Sure, one has absolute independence, and with that also has to act like an adult. But, isn't being a rebel without a cause half the fun? You can't sneak over to your friend's house for a party when you're twenty-two. I don't mean to imply that as an adult, friendships will be meaningless. I simply want to say that friends today need to live it up together now — through all the heartbreaks and unforgettable times — before it's too late.

For the seniors this year, the time is rapidly approaching when we have to say goodbye to all those long-time school buds we've accumulated over the years. Some will be short tootle-loo's to those you only saw and talked to during photography class. Others may be a little bit more difficult, accompanied by a warm hug or handshake and sincere wishings of good luck, for those chums whom you sat beside every morning in front of those beautiful blue lockers and shared calculus homework. And then come the ones you've been dreading ever since you realized how fast first semester slipped by. Behind all those promises to write and the excitement of finally being out of the house and free from Mom and Dad's iron grip will be a few tears and heartaches. High school friends are probably the most innocent relationships ever. That's part of the reason they're also the hardest to hold on to. "I may not have many friends now, and I know I'll never forget them, but I also know they'll be replaced," commented senior Lynn Eaton. Take our parents, for example. Just how many times do they plan visits to see high school friends or make hour-long distance phone calls every other Sunday to keep in touch? If we were to follow their example, our closest friendships would begin with the neighbors of our first one-bedroom apartment. But, I don't mean to end this on a depressing note because I'm one of those devoted to keeping in touch, and I value each one of my Lancer friendships very dearly. I'm also determined to change the tradition of our preceding generation simply because "a friend's a friend forever," and I will not say never; I'll remember each one of you forever!

"Do not walk in front of me for I may not follow.
Do not walk behind me for I may not lead.
Just walk beside me and be my friend."

What's An Old Skinhead To Do?

As a junior Chris Cambern had his own individual style in both his hairstyle and clothing.

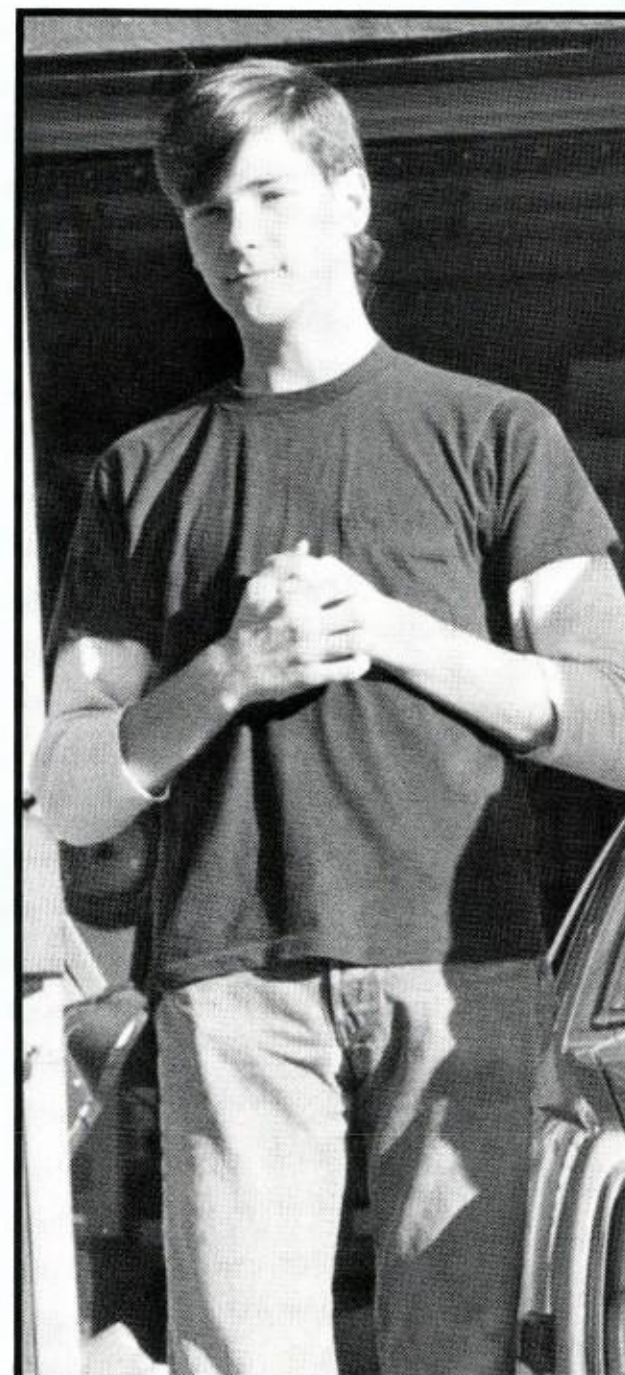

No longer does Chris Cambern proudly fly the colors of Punkism. No longer will he be sporting clothes adorned with spray paint. No longer will he shave large portions of his head just to be different. Why the sudden change?

"It's these new punks; they're all over the place," Chris scoffed disgruntledly. What, a trendsetter disavowing his followers? To understand why, one must first understand Punkism. Because there is no official Punkist Manifesto or Declaration of Let's Shave our Heads and Tear our Clothes in Order to Look Goofy, the following is mainly speculation.

Politically, punks advocate anarchy. But, let's face it, very few of our suburban punks would really enjoy anarchy and their dad's losing high paying jobs that allow the kids to buy all that jewelry. So, the real source of conflict between the old guard and the avant-garde is social. The main social belief of Punkism is to be as outrageously different from the norm as possible. Hopefully, by pushing themselves to the limit socially, punks can find their identity somewhere in between. Judging from the underclassmen, it would seem that this lifestyle has succeeded because it has been adopted by so many people. But, this success is its failure. As Chris grumbled, fighting back a tear, "It's become 'in' to be punk." Those two phrases "in" and punk have an inherent conflict. To be punk is to deviate from the norm, but now that the norm is deviation, it is a mess.

So, what is an old skinhead to do when his ideology has been popularized much to his dismay? Prepism has been done; Psychedelism has been done. How about Dance Feverism?

A Chance Encounter

I was cruising happily down Wenonga Drive with thoughts of a very enjoyable weekend ahead of me when I was painlessly pierced by a burst of microwave radiation from a police radar unit mercilessly wielded by Officer Chance (real name: Sir), the much feared Prairie Village traffic cop.

A quick glance out my left window informed me of the evil presence lurking in a wooded driveway, cutting down the youth of Johnson County. Moments later, a grey car of American manufacture with flashing lights and a siren was closely following me.

Being a law-abiding and responsible youth, I carefully eased my wounded Renault to the side of the road and stopped. I wondered what a coronary seizure would feel like.

The predator was particularly slow in claiming his prey; I waited a full twenty seconds before the officer got out of his car and demanded to see my papers.

It was so painless to have my name entered in the little ticket book; all I had to do was sign on the dotted line. I did not have to perform any acrobatics to prove my sobriety or allow my car to be sacrificed in the name of Probable Cause.

I ended up losing a sizable chunk of dinero and a great deal of face. Not too bad for a minor and insignificant Speeding Ticket.

Next time, I won't take any Chances. I'm carrying radar-seeking missiles.

EXCUSES, EXCUSES

Ah ... the perfect excuse. The average high school student is constantly in pursuit of it. After all, the average high school student needs excuses for a variety of things: tardies, late homework, getting out of class, not going to school, not going to work, etc. When asked to list their favorite excuses, here's how some students responded:

- My contacts are bothering me.
- I went to sleep and my mom didn't wake me up. (That's right, blame it on someone else!)
- My cat ran away, and I spent all night looking for it.
- I was absent that day.
- I overslept.
- I left the top down, and it's raining.
- I left the curling iron on at home.
- I had to go to the doctor to see if I could give blood.

-I spilled something on my clothes. Looks like I'll have to go home and change.

-I have to floss my cat.

-I was in the bathroom throwing up.

-No one told me about it!

-My car broke down.

Sorry this article's so short, but you see, my cat ran away and ...

Lengthy Competition

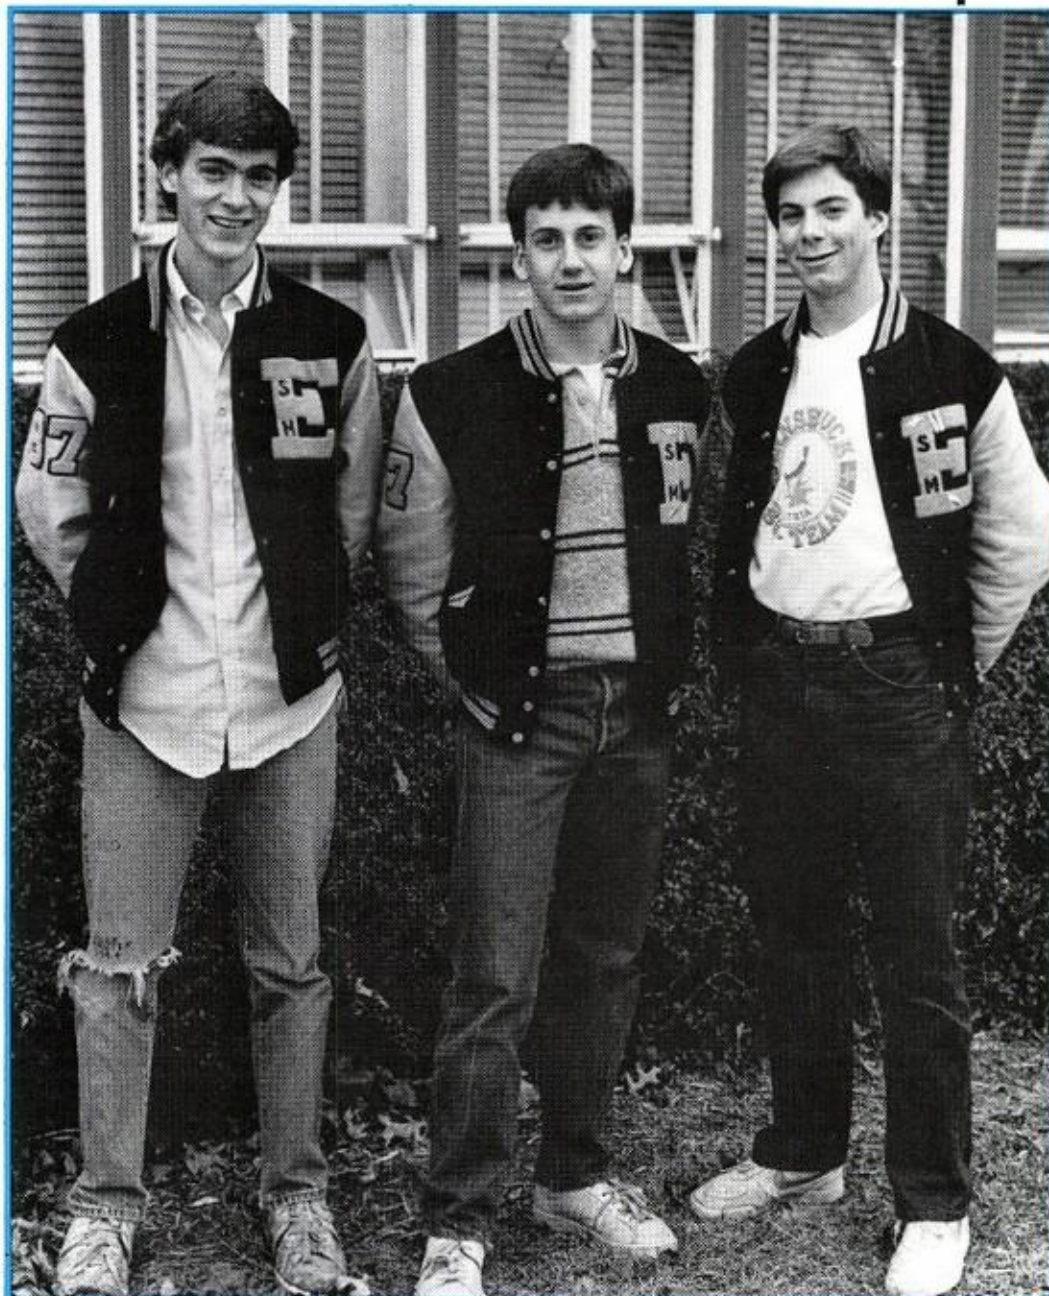

Twenty-six grueling miles from start to finish: the marathon. In 490 BC, the Greeks defeated the invading Persians on a plain called Marathon. The Greek general, fearing that the city of Athens might surrender to a sea attack (as Athens had no knowledge of the victory), sent his swiftest runner to carry news of the battle to the city, twenty-five miles away. The messenger reached Athens, but after delivering his message, died of fatigue. Why, if the messenger died, did the run have such appeal that it has survived the centuries to become a popular sport?

Both teachers and students actively participate in these runs. Runner, senior Bo Criss, who has run the St. Louis Marathon for the past two years, thinks his race is "kind of like a big finish to the season after state — a test — to see what you can do — push the limits." Last year, Criss, a member of the school cross-country and track teams, ran twelve miles each Saturday in addition to the normal team work-outs to train for the marathon. Another member of the cross-country team, junior Sabra Gibbins, ran in the Kansas City Prime Health Marathon this fall. Why? "Because it's a challenge — something not everybody can do. You have to work hard — it's nice when it pays." Gibbins continued, "It was fun but painful. I'd like to do it again." Gibbins ran thirteen to twenty miles on the weekends while running the team work-outs during the week. Biology teacher Rick Gould followed much the same schedule, but on a larger scale. Gould, who ran in the Boston Marathon as well as the St. Louis Marathon, averaged seventy miles a week, dispersing the mileage with one long run, at least twenty miles, a week. When asked why he runs the marathons, Gould replied, "I'm stupid — no question about it."

Not all those who run train for the marathons. Runner, junior Nicole Cox explained, "I'll probably run one when I'm older and can spend more time training. If you're going to run a marathon, you might as well really run it." Runner, junior Beth Calvet commented, "I don't think that I'll ever be in one because I think it's just too far. I enjoy running long distances — say about eight miles — every once in a while, but twenty-six is really pushing it. I guess some people have the talent and stamina to do it — and with good times — but I think it's crazy."

Despite the inevitable pain and lengthy, time-consuming training, most who run marathons really believe that it's worth it.

A Deadly Combination

The results of drinking and driving were made painfully clear to students with the loss of three East students. This lesson was not, however, confined to the immediate area. The problem of drinking and driving received unprecedented recognition throughout the United States.

Several steps were taken in an attempt to curb this rising epidemic. One, was the Kansas State Legislature's decision to raise the drinking age to twenty-one. Another was the introduction of L.A. (Low Alcohol) beer to the consumer market. One of the most evident signs of the new concern for this problem was the unequalled enrollment in the SADD chapter at East following the deaths of Elizabeth Schultz, David Bernard and Tim Wyatt.

Some unfortunately, will not learn from the mistakes of others and will continue to look death in the face. For others, however, a lesson was embeded so deep inside of them that they will never be able to forget it. That lesson, of course, is to avoid drinking and driving at all costs. The price of a human life is too high a price to pay.

New Isn't Necessarily Better

For most, the first day of school acted as a reunion for classmates. Summer stories were swapped, and the air was filled with the laughter and excitement of friends. However, for a few others the first day was an unpleasant memory. The new kids on the block had a day filled with the despair of trying to blend into the crowd and of fitting into a new and different life. Junior Bridget Bartholme, who moved from Chicago, said, "I didn't know what to do or where to go. I just had my schedule." One freshman, who wished to remain unnamed, felt like "a little person lost in the crowd."

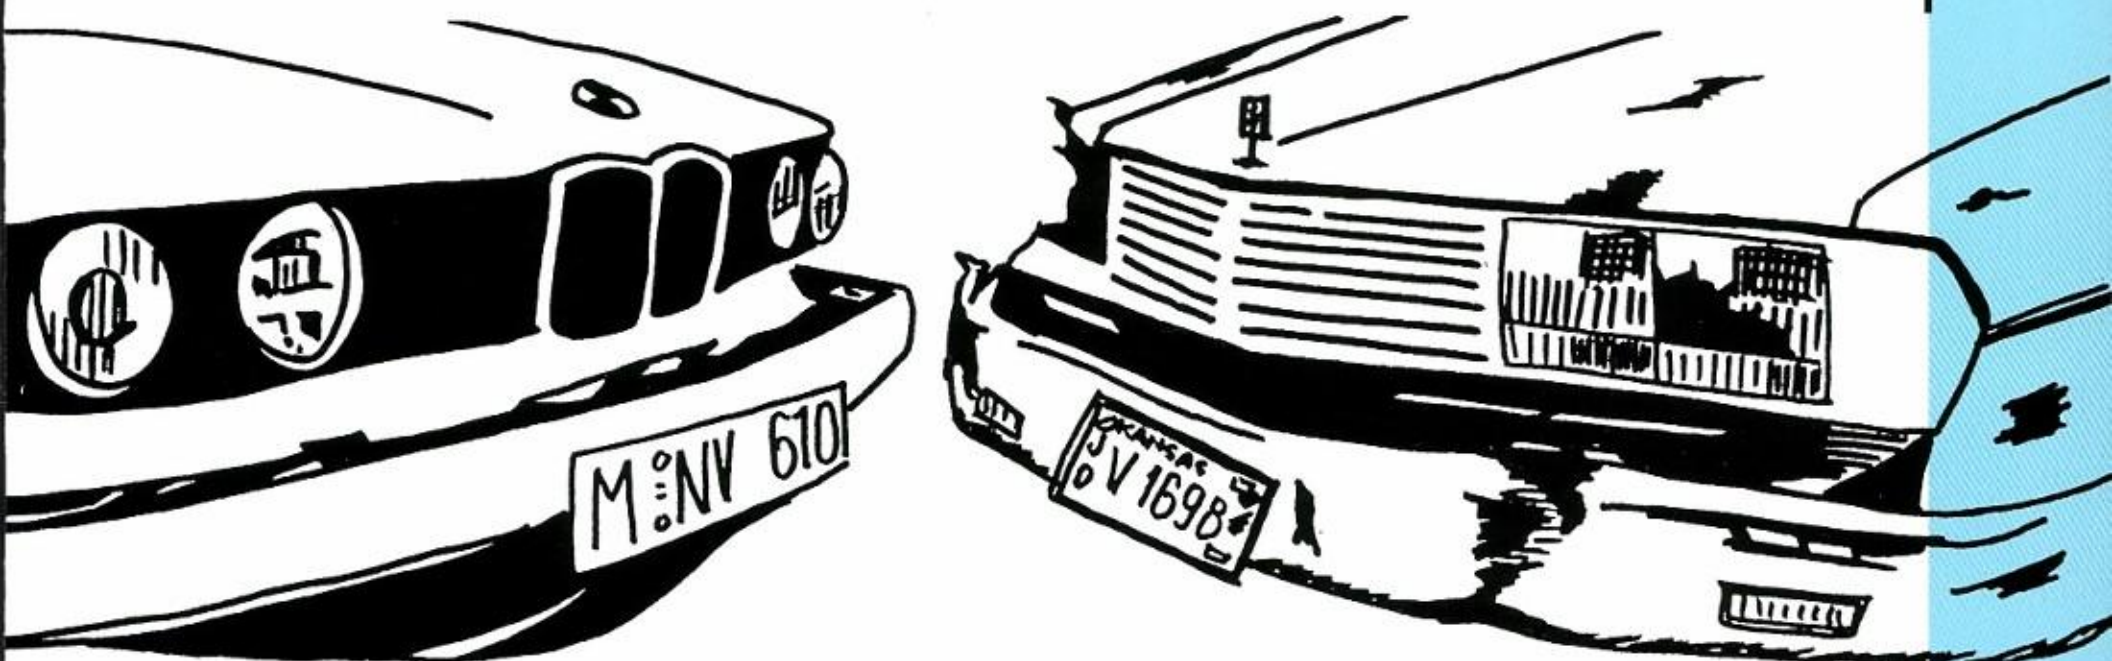

Being new meant facing different styles of dress and different slang. Often the new person did not know where he was going or where he had been. Walking among total strangers was not anybody's idea of a good time. Junior Heather Sielicki said, "You see a whole bunch of different people, and you have to adjust to people's new way of thinking."

After a new student became familiar with his or her surroundings, the next step was to become acquainted with the people and to start making friends. Freshman Larry Richardson, from California, thought that one way to do this was in-class projects: "You pick a partner that you think would fit you, and you try to be friends with him and his friends." Senior Kristine Aarvold, an exchange student from Norway, thought, "It's important to be open and outgoing." Bridget Bartholme stated, "If you get involved in some activity, then you are instantly confined in a group of people you have to get to know." Another important fact to remember was not to compare everyone and everything with one's old school and friends. Keeping an open mind, a positive attitude, and a smile was necessary. For a while the social calendar lay empty in a straggling moving cartoon, but time and effort took care of that problem.

Moving has its ups and downs. Bridget Bartholme said, "It's lonely, but you feel very independent. Moving makes you grow up instantly. You have to do everything on your own." Senior Jeff Porter felt being new "is kind of scary but at the same time exciting." Although new could be a synonym for homesick, most learned to move on and build a new life.

What's Wrong With The East Image?

Every year in the yearbook, there is an article about the East image and what other people think of East. Even though any generalization of such a large and diverse group as East is subject to inaccuracy, I apologize to the radical fringe, and propose that the school, on the whole, accept the image we have been given.

It is hard to understand why people take offense with being accused of being rich. Granted, many people see us as being snotty or stuck-up, but hey, they also think we all live like people on Dynasty. Why people get so upset over being called rich is ridiculous. Parents worked hard to earn that money, and their kids should be proud of them. And do not play innocent and claim that we are not rich. Look at Mission Hills; those are not shanties over there. Take a walk in the parking lot; those cars were not free. So not everyone lives in Mission Hills or drives BMW, but if other people want to believe that, allow them their fantasies. The way I see it, someone has got to be richer and classier than everyone else, and we qualify better than anyone else.

This all may seem a bit arrogant, but I'm no Rockefeller either. I drive a somewhat less than mint condition Nova, but if people want to think I drive a Porsche just because I go to East, I let them. As long as you do not have to borrow any money from them, milk this thing for all it's worth. They love thinking it as much as you will love pretending it. So, remember, next time someone asks you snidely if you drive a BMW because you go to East, just reply, "Yes, but it is only a 1985."

They will love it.

Five Minutes Of Freedom

"And then on July 14, 1789, the French Revolutionaries stormed the Bastille, and the Revolution . . ." The thin red arm pivoted slowly from its end, pushing the bigger arms forward in time; slowly, ever so leisurely did it care to move. If one blinked, it seemed not to have moved a degree.

Just one more time around . . . then maybe . . . BEEEEEEB! A wave of relief overtakes the students throughout the school. Desks slide out of place, papers are crammed into notebooks, the clamor of voices resounds off the walls, and bodies flood the halls. Students spend thirty-five minutes of their day in the passing period traveling from class to class, but much social activity takes place during the brief five unstructured minutes each hour of the school. Desks slide out of place, papers are class so I can talk to all the pretty girls," said Kelly Paddock. This view may be somewhat of an exaggeration. However, to many, the time between classes served as a time to talk with others on subjects ranging from last hour's exam to the cute boy who just walked by, or the evening's activities. With teachers regulating the amount of socializing during classes, the passing period enabled students to become socially active among their peers.

Many times those minutes in between classes seemed scanty in length when they were needed for last minute cramming of finishing assignments. "I'll go to my class and start doing my homework or ask people what the assignment was so I can do it the next hour," commented John Fletcher. "I use it to cram a week's worth of information into five minutes, and if anyone comes near me, I get really uptight," added Kathy Henson.

Whether one treated it as a break, a time to stretch, a time to chat, or a time to finish studying, the five minutes in between classes were a valuable part of the school day.

Not In Any Textbook

School. Trudging from one identical, regimented class to another. All the time students are enticed by the standard wall full of windows that show that there really is life outside a textbook. However, Biology II students were granted the rare opportunity of experiencing nature firsthand.

Led by Mr. Gould, the Biology II teacher, students trekked down to south central Missouri, specifically Rolla, where they participated in a breathtaking, two-day whirlwind tour of an area cave. Experience was not necessary; on-the-job training was provided. All that was required was a propensity for exploring. For such a minor investment, students were more than paid back in experiencing cave life, falling in mud, and, most importantly, finding out about themselves.

It was the last point that distanced this experience from the classroom and textbooks that tell you nothing of yourself. It is hard for outsiders to comprehend, but veteran spelunkers told how some of the most zealous enthusiasts cracked under the pressure that abounded in the cave. Mr. Gould went so far as to claim that some people will kill you to get out of the little crawl spaces. Although that seems rough, that kind of learning about dealing with stress was important to students. Because of this knowledge, along with the cave knowledge gained, the cave trip was a vibrant and interesting part of East's curriculum.

The First "Ugh" Date

As the saying goes, high school could be the best time of one's life. Or, it could be the most embarrassing or awkward time. Although the students don't experience these extreme moments every day, they are still a part of the proverbial "high school years."

Humorously uncomfortable moments are usually pushed toward the "forget" pile, but if remembered, they become the sugar and spice of the memories. Of these particular moments, many occurred during a first date with a certain person, with whom one was not extremely well-acquainted before the date. Because these incidents remind them so much of high school, a few Lancers volunteered to share some of their funniest experiences.

Emma Longan, senior, told about an embarrassing accident that occurred when she was in the company of senior Tim Danneburg. At the end of the evening, they climbed the icy steps leading to Emma's front door. While attempting to turn around and thank him for a nice evening, Emma "slipped on the ice and slid right between his legs. I just lay there on my back and laughed."

Some experiences didn't seem to be really funny at the moment, but got better with time. "It's so awful to think of it now," exclaimed junior Valerie Rockwell, as she looked back on her sophomore WPA disaster. Valerie's car broke down on the day of the dance, and upon missing the dinner reservations, she realized that her money was in the glove compartment of her recently towed car. Thank heavens for country clubs, where dinner can be charged. The worst part to remember now, however, was that later in the evening they picked up her date's best friend, who became Valerie's boyfriend a week or two later.

Another experience that was not as funny at the time belonged to Kathleen Judge, a senior. It was her first date with a boy who decided to surprise her by taking her to dinner at a very nice restaurant. "Well, I'd already eaten," explained Kathleen. She didn't know she was being taken to dinner until they arrived at the restaurant, so "we had to leave, even though we had already gone inside. It really made the rest of the evening awkward, because the night was off to such an uncomfortable

One of the newest things to high school students, and therefore the most subject to problems, was cars. A few friends went on a triple date to the Sweetheart Dance. John Fletcher was not old enough to legally drive, but did anyway. "Everything went really well until the end," when he took his date home. "I was backing out of the driveway, and I thought we went crooked, so I stopped." As it turned out, he was in the yard, and had almost hit a bush. "We got stuck," and the boys got out to push. The girl now at the wheel pushed on the gas too hard, and their suits were covered with snow and mud. By the time they left, "there was a huge hole in the ground. I went back to apologize the next day, and she hadn't even noticed."

High school dates were sometimes as new to the students as cars, and the stories often demonstrated the students' inexperience with them. Of all high school memories they were the best. They were sometimes wonderful, sometimes awful, but usually just plain funny.

Wrong Way

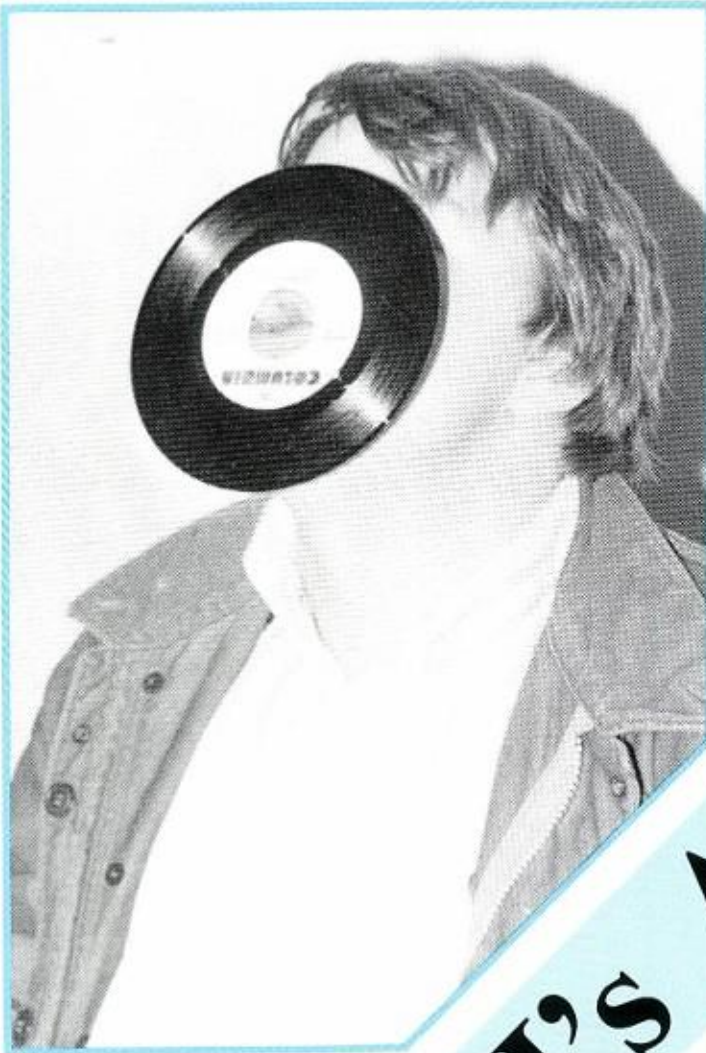

Nowhere were the changes this year more readily apparent than in the parking lot, where new directions were the law of the land. All of these alterations had a common purpose: to make the parking lot a healthier place and to accommodate a greater number of cars. They succeeded — succeeded that is in bringing about all sorts of predicaments for drivers.

Two new drives were constructed, one between the pool and main parking lots, and another connecting the driving range to 75th street. Thus, for the first time the driving range was opened to student parking as well as to car pool parking, allowing car pool drivers to reserve spaces just slightly closer to the building than the cars parked on Delmar. Then, of course, there was the "mystery median" (located just south of the academic wing of the building) that changed all year long.

When school started, back in August, the median didn't even exist, and there was still a direct route from Mission Rd. to the Spirit Circle; a few weeks later a median closed this avenue. Then someone got creative and divided the median down the middle, leaving space enough for a fire truck to pass (as this step was taken because of a problem with fire codes). Then the open space was obstructed with a wooden barrier. It made school much more interesting to try to predict how, when, and if the "mystery median" would change. This brings to mind an exceptional idea for yet another change at school.

The administration could institute a school lottery. For a mere two dollars students could submit a short creative paragraph stating what they thought the median would do next. Then, every Friday the winners would get to spin a big wheel (which could be constructed in the front hall) in hopes of winning a jackpot of at least fifty dollars. The rest of the money collected in the lottery could then be placed in a parking lot fund, to be used next summer to get the thing fixed the RIGHT WAY.

DJ's Avoid Bloodshed Punkers Hostile To Top '40 Hits

After the last notes of "Sunday Bloody Sunday" are played, a voice breathing heavily over the speaker system announces a Donny and Marie look-alike contest. The winner receives an autographed copy of the Harbinger.

It is the KSME disc jockeys that keep the lunchroom entertained with such comments as these. They are David Budin, Julie Harden, Jeff Hopkins, Elan Lipschitz, Sean Riley, Curt Shirling, Bryant Harris, and John Gamble. Their station is a small broadcasting booth at the south end of the cafeteria. The D.J.'s were given the "ticket booth" only after writing letters to the administration.

However, there has been concern over the type of music being played during lunch. Because the station has a limited selection of "mainstream" albums, there have been many requests for punk music. According to Jeff Hopkins, the radio station suffers as a result of their meager supply of music and "A lot of closed-minded individuals are coming down on us because we don't play what they want to hear. I have received many personal threats from people who want to hear 'real music.' However, they have never requested any song or brought any 'real music'. I think I'll play what I have until then."

Kurt Shirling, senior, has been on the radio station for two years and calmly stated, "Well, as of right now, the radio station is pretty unstable, but by the end of the year, everything will be fine, and there will be no problems."

The Final Test

"Do not open your test booklet until you are told to do so," the proctor says in a monotone voice. You look around the room and think, "Well, this is it. This is what I have spent months worrying over -- and here I am." Was it really worth all the worry?

The SAT or ACT can be the most important test that a student will take in his high school career. Some students will study for these tests intensely. Students in the South go so far as to take their SAT books with them to the beaches and when they go out. Teachers there make a special effort to stress Latin in the curriculum because they think it will improve students' scores in the verbal section.

Students here had a variety of methods for studying for these tests, ranging anywhere from cramming the night before to spending hours in intense preparation courses. Senior Jay Kapp opted to help himself as much as possible by taking the expensive and time-consuming Stanley Kaplan course. Kapp commented, "You can get as much out of it as you put into it." Other options may be hiring a tutor or taking courses that are not as intense. These methods did force students to spend some time preparing for the test and getting familiar with it. Knowing what to expect saved time in itself, and that was important. The one factor that the courses stressed was to get a good night's sleep the night before, and to eat a nutritious breakfast. But your mother could have told you that without having to pay fifty dollars. Some students decided to just wing it until the morning of the test. As long as they made it to the test center before 8:30 and didn't fall asleep during the test, they were satisfied.

The SAT or ACT is only as stressful as students make it. The students who were serious about their goals and studied hard found that their hard work usually paid off in the end.

"Mom, I Mean Teach, I Mean . . ."

"If Kelly does anything wrong, I hear about it right away," joked Mrs. Garner, French teacher and parent of senior Kelly McClenahan. Mrs. Garner was one of five faculty members who had kids at East. Although the situation is not too unusual, it seems so for most of us.

Few kids believe they would enjoy having a parent at school with them, but most of the kids whose parents are a part of the faculty say it is fine. Doug Rehfield, son of American History teacher Mr. Rehfield, liked being a lab assistant for his father; he said, "I'd already know what he wanted done and wouldn't have to bother him about it."

Algebra and geometry teacher, Mr.

Lee, also liked working at the same school with his twins, Brian and Crystalynn. "It's an advantage because I get to take part in their activities," he claimed.

Some of the faculty have had their children in class and really enjoyed it. Mrs. Garner taught both French I and French II to her daughter and said, "It was fun for me to see how she was as a student. She asked a lot of questions and seemed really interested." They never had any problems being in class together.

However, some of the pairs have had their funny moments. Doug Rehfield, who was in his father's history class, said, "It went really well until one day when I said 'Dad' in class and Jennifer Strauss started laughing hysterically."

All of the parents said they tried to treat their kids just like the other students. Unfortunately, some of the kids still received a little flack from their fellow students. "Every time I got an A on something, someone would say, 'Your father gave it to you,' which never happened," explained Doug. "I was three points away from an A first quarter and I took the B."

But most of the time the students liked having their parents at school, and vice versa. Even if it didn't seem like a big deal most of the time, it did bring the families a little closer.

A Dream Achieved

Criss Bikes To Boston

On June 17 of last summer while most people were either working or lounging by the pool, Bo Criss, senior, was embarking on a journey most people could only dream about; he was on his way to Boston, Massachusetts, with only a bicycle under him and a friend beside him. For two weeks, he spent his days under the sun averaging about 135 miles a day, until he finally reached his destination 1540 miles later: Massachusetts and his sister's home.

Along the way, Criss stayed in motels. He also learned to water-ski with his companion, Paul Childs, at Childs' cousin's home in Peoria, Illinois. However, Childs was forced to stop in Logansport, Indiana, because of inflamed cartilage, so Criss had to continue on his own. Asked what he thought about while he was riding, Criss said he did not think about the conditions. He thought about people he knows.

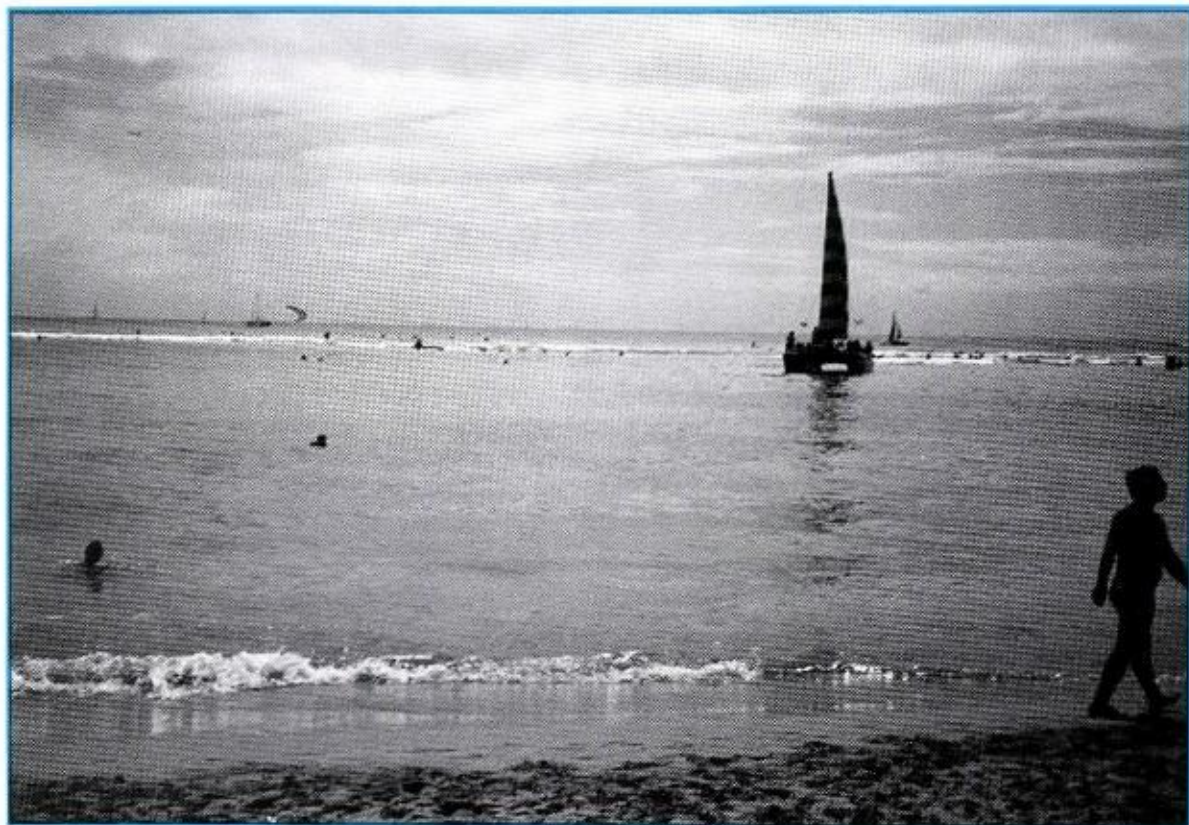

He did not train for the trip. Instead, he rode 200 miles to Wichita, Kansas, in a day as a "confidence builder." Criss thought it was easy, much easier than he had anticipated. "Anybody could do it," he explained; "from here to Pennsylvania, it's flat."

When he finally finished, he wanted to do the whole thing over again. He also said he had begun to get a little tired and explained that there were "kinda some mountains in the way." In two years, he will ride to California, but next summer he is taking it easy with a tiny triathlon at Cape Cod. The race involves a two-and-a-half mile swim, a 112 mile bike ride, and a 26 mile run. What else is there to do in the summer?

Breaking Away

As Christmas memories faded and finals were forgotten, students started counting down the days until Spring Break. Nothing beats second semester blues better than a week off from school in the middle of March. Those five days offered a quick taste of the upcoming summer.

Students chose various places to celebrate their 120 hours of freedom. Many grabbed their skis, migrated to the mountains, and hit the slopes in Colorado. Sophomore Pam Davis commented, "It (Spring Break) reminds me of snow." On the other hand, junior Lisa Lambert thought, "Everybody goes someplace warm." One popular hot spot, Florida, was ideal for baking on the beach and catching some waves. While many made a run for it, others stayed in town to kick back, relax, and have some fun. Freshman Justin Dirks felt Spring Break was being "home for a week." An enthusiastic sophomore planned on making the most of her time — "sleeping all day and partying all night."

After this short break, students returned with a spring in their step and smiles on their faces. After all, all work and no play doesn't get you a suntan.

Brain Death

Drudging home on a cold and bleak January day, I felt a two ton block descending upon my head. Chilled to the bone and frostbitten in the heart, I actively calculated the amount of caffeine I must take in in order to survive the upcoming evening. Finals! Ughh! The most dreaded days of the school year. Nothing is more frustrating than purusing a semester's worth of notes and realizing that none of them look the least bit familiar. One hundred and sixty-one days of lecture and homework all boils down to one monumental evening of cramming. Approximately two hours after I began, all sanity evaporated and an irrepressible urge to scream filled my thoughts. I attempted to pretend that I would actually survive the evening: "I think I can, I think I can . . ." I flipped through the notes at a faster rate. My hands began to shake as dots flashed before my eyes. The words and lines on the page in front of me began to blur. Soon my thoughts took a new turn from "I think I can to I think I won't." It was at this precise moment that the inevitable occurred . . . BRAIN DEATH.

Once brain death has occurred all hope is lost. No amount of previous scheduling or preparation can successfully reverse the condition. Of course, this knowledge rarely stops hopeful students from making a valiant attempt at actually studying for these monstrous exams. Maria Brazil begins by eating "tons" after school in mental preparation.

The voice of experience tells us that even a six pack of coke, a pot of coffee, and four bags of nacho cheese Doritos will not combat the fog that develops within our minds. So try whatever you want, it's probably not going to work. Just be ready because NO ONE can avoid brain death. (besides there's always next semester).

The Perils Of Fitness

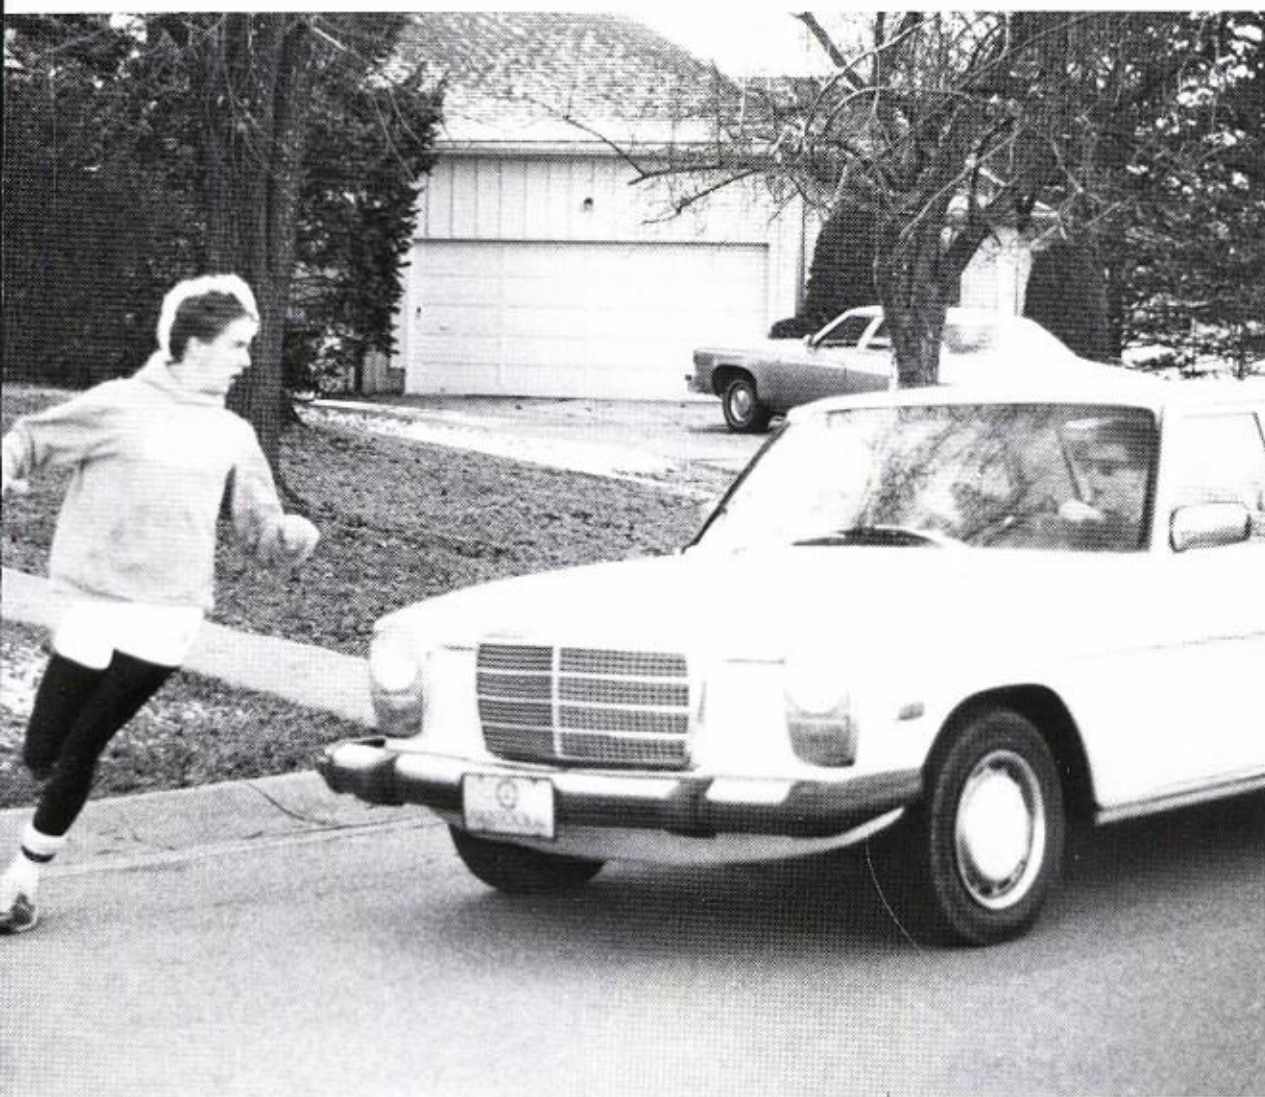

Running along on the sidewalk, listening to the rhythmic thumping as my feet hit the cement, I thankfully looked ahead at the traffic light that had just turned yellow. I could rest when I got to it if I timed everything just right. SCREECH! A loud honk and colorful language called my attention to a silver Honda Accord perched indignantly between a driveway and the street, inches from my toes.

However, staying on the sidewalk and obeying traffic rules doesn't guarantee safety. While running, biology teacher Rick-Gould has had people drive by and throw beer cans at him, and he has also had people swing at him as they drove past. Gould has been hit by the front of a car. "I rolled over the hood. She just went on, maybe she thought I was supposed to do that."

Cars and their drivers aren't always out to hurt the runners. Some can just be really annoying. In addition to honks, splashes, and whistles, there is some person-to-person interaction. Gould explained, "People stop me for directions. I had someone ask me how to get to Los Angeles. I said, 'Go to Oklahoma and turn right.'"

To Be A Hawk

"Where are you going to college?"

"Harvard, of course. And you?"

"I'll go to K.U."

A look of shock appears on the listener's face.

"K.U.? Why?"

Why not? Kansas is not known for large universities, but it does have a strong school in Lawrence. It is called the University of Kansas, and it is sometimes underrated by Shawnee Mission students. "If we lived somewhere else we would see it as a pretty good deal," said K.U.-bound senior Jenny FitzSimmons. "People are always looking for a way to criticize it." Because K.U. has to accept everyone who lives in Kansas, thus eliminating competition, the school receives an extra amount of criticism, and students who plan to go there are viewed with arched eyebrows. However, it is an opportunity practically in the backyard.

Only forty-five minutes away, K.U. provides an atmosphere of freedom with the option to come home whenever the need arises. "People think you have to go far away to college for some reason," senior Sean Campbell said. "Although it sounds glamorous going away to college, it is a lot harder than people want to admit," FitzSimmons added.

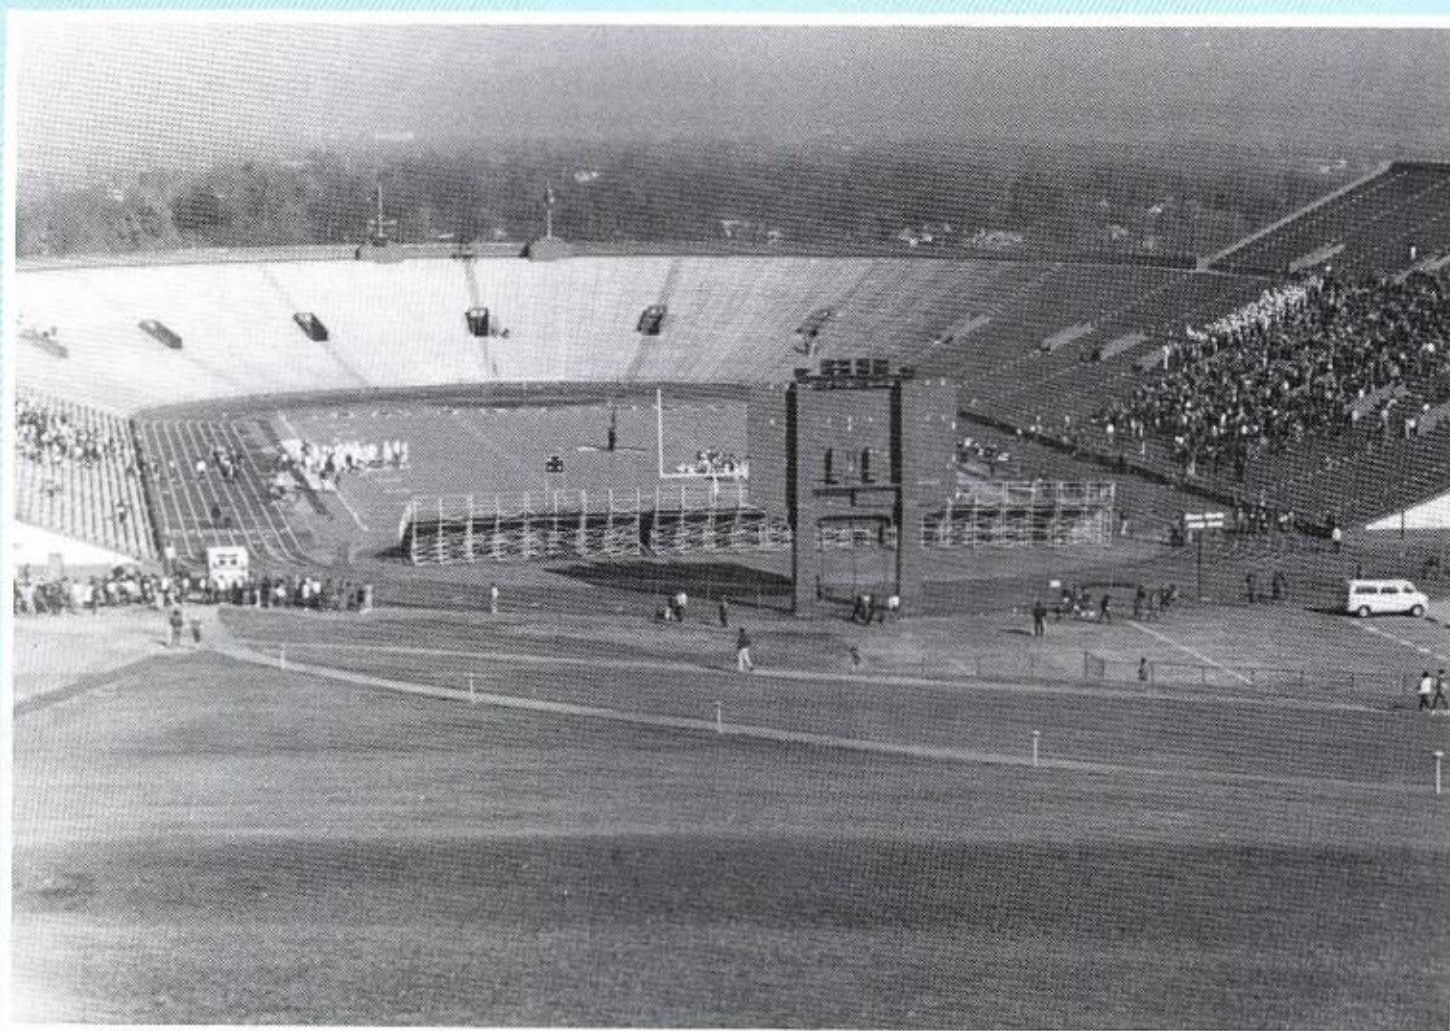

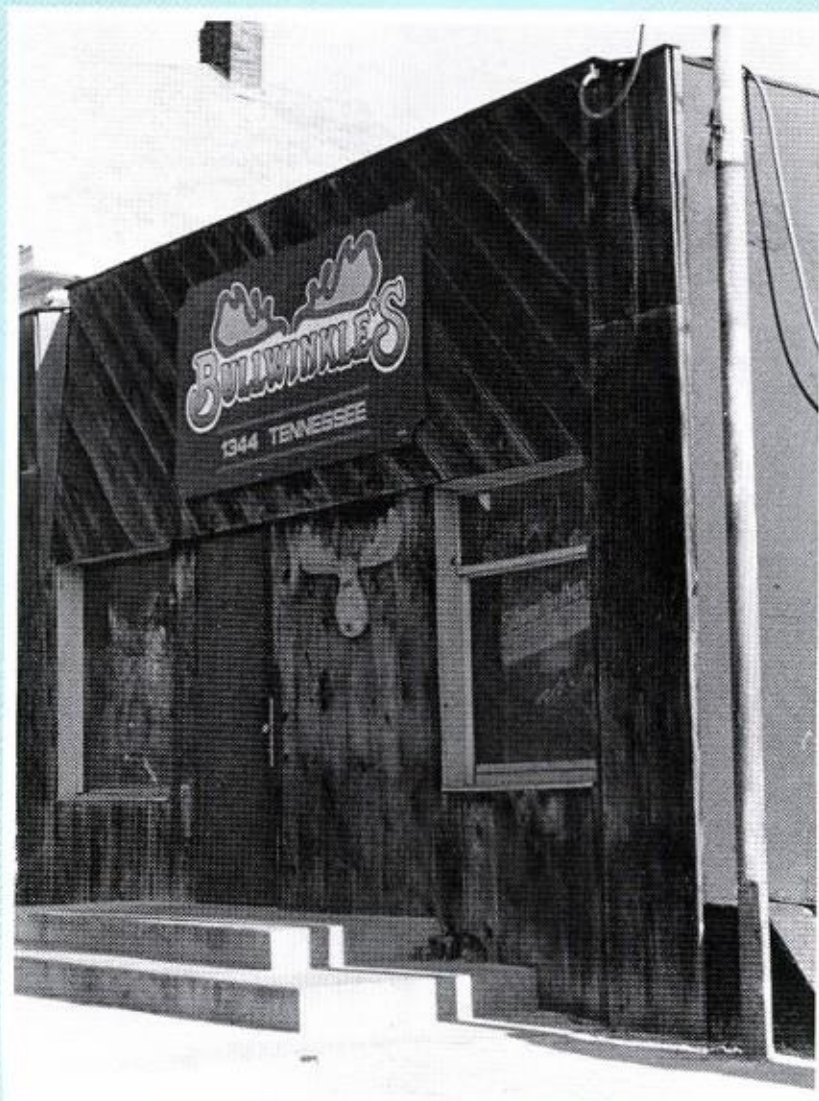

Senior John Tikwart had a different view, though. He explained that because there were so many familiar faces, "East people don't get away from each other. They stick together. It's like high school all over." Tikwart believes that college should be a time to get away and be independent. "It's not an inferior school at all; it's just too close to home."

Many freshmen are not really ready to move across the country. In this case K.U. serves a useful purpose. It is independence at a smaller price and of close proximity as well as a strong foundation for graduate work at a big name institution.

P.D.A.: Scourge Of The Halls

Five minutes.

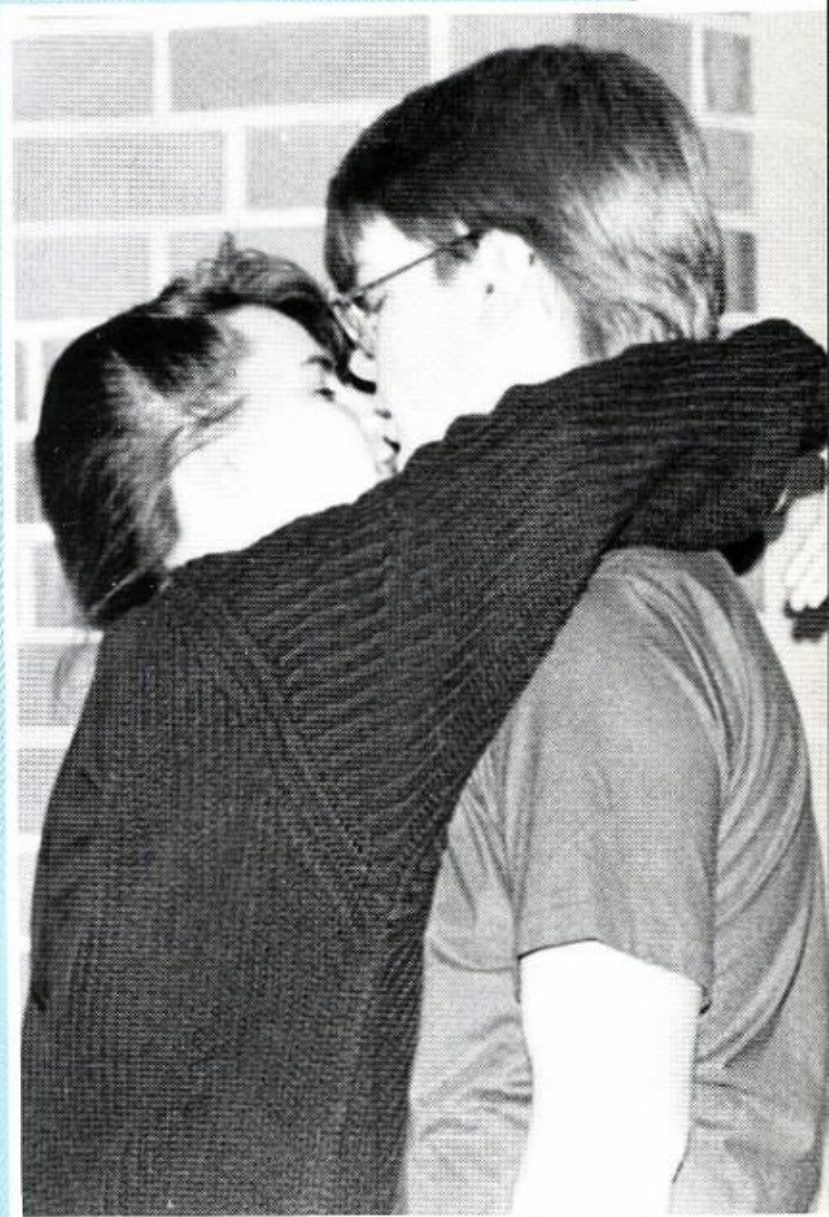

For most students it is hardly enough time to go to their locker and get to their next class, let alone talk to any friends. But, a few resourceful individuals find time to meet their betrothed and proceed to entangle their limbs about each other, despite the presence of over 2000 students and faculty members who have no involvement in the relationship at all. Add the chance of administrative punishment, and this scene is hardly romantic.

Well then, are these P.D.A. offenders admirable, young lovers who are willing to risk violating social and administrative policies to be with each other, or are they just plumb ignorant? Listening to the constant string of insults hurled at them by the majority of the student body, one would have to accept the latter. Statements are made such as "Why do they think I want to watch them climbing all over themselves? I've got cable T.V." Sara Smith snickered, "Why don't they get a room somewhere?" These views were echoed by the majority of the student body in an independent survey. (I asked a couple of my friends slanted questions.)

In response, P.D.A. offenders said it was their own business, and they were not threatened by the administration. One violator, whose name is withheld at his own request because, gosh, he could get in real trouble, said, "I don't really care about the administration coming down on us. I kind of like being on the lam, running from the law; it's exciting." When confronted with the disgust of others, Lynne Easton replied, "Tell them to mind their own business."

So, like any other great social debate, this one will probably rage on forever. The administration and students need to work together to find a happy medium where sensitive students can express their emotions without making the rest of the school ill. The real problem lies in the lack of participation by the rest of the school. Why don't we pass out grading sheets and allow uninvolved students to score the grapplers. Then at the end of the year we can present a Big Al and Susie Honorary Trophy to the winner. See . . . some solutions aren't hard to find.

I Heard It Through The Grapevine

The animated raisin danced across the television screen to the tune of "I Heard It Through the Grapevine," the first in a long line of clones advertising California raisins. Students enjoyed this and other clever commercials as they watched television.

Typically ignored as a break in the scheduled TV program, due to their lack of quality, commercials have recently caught the interest of many students. Favorites included commercials for Levis' 501 Blues, Seagram's Wine Coolers, and Bartles and Jaymes' Wine Coolers. To tempt viewers into buying their 501 Blues, Levis used memorable music and comfortable young men and women in jeans that had "shrunk to fit." Seagrams set the stage to lure consumers into trying their brand of Wine Coolers; a backdrop of popular music and carefree people with "Moonlighting" star Bruce Willis in the foreground. Bartle and Jaymes combined the unusual with a bit of humor. Viewers follows the two elderly men through a trip to New York City, watched as the men examined the versatility of Bartles and Jaymes' Wine Coolers, and were consistently thanked for their "continued support."

Catchy slogans, popular songs, and easily recognized stars were among the most popular methods used to make products seem more attractive to consumers.

Advertisers used a variety of techniques to promote their products. Some commercials were absolute flops, while others, like last year's Wendy's "Where's the beef?" will be remembered as a classic example of innovative advertising.

Embarrassing Moments

Many students blush when they painfully recall those unforgettable blunders of their freshman and sophomore years. Now an upper classman, Alissa Taylor confessed with hesitation the innocent bloop of a naive sophomore girl. "While I was standing in the hall outside the swimming pool, a senior guy came up to me and asked me to deliver a message to his coach. Having never really been around East, I causally walked in the door the senior guy had directed me to and found myself walking into a room of naked football players who were just as shocked to see me as I was to see them. Of course they found it amusing how I happened to walk in on them, and I noticed the sign on the door as I flew out of the room at top speed: 'Boys Team Locker Room.' Yes, I thought I could have died or at least transferred schools," said Alissa as she found herself turning red at even the remembrance of her sophomore naiveté.

Sharing the same embarrassment, Michelle Sinclair remembered, "Having to go to the bathroom really bad, I ran out of the classroom into the hall where the bathroom doors were unmarked. Obviously choosing the wrong door, I found myself in the guys' bathroom. I peeped out into the hall to make sure no one had seen me, and I casually walked to the drinking fountain when a voice behind me said, "What were you doing in the guys' john?" I still blush when I see that senior guy who saw my stupid and typically sophomoric mistake," said Michelle.

Although the story might sound very familiar to many of us, it didn't lessen the embarrassment Marcia Bertsch felt as she related, "Everyone has to do it at least once; I mean tripping on the stairs is part of growing up and part of starting high school."

"I've never felt like a bigger nad," said Beth Stopperan as she remembered, "I was singing 'Mandy' by Barry Manilow in the shower at Lori Brazil's house, and I guess I didn't realize how loud I was singing. Lori went and got her parents to listen to me and her dad opened the door and said, 'Hey, cut down the noise in there!'"

Although she is a junior, Beth said, "It was quite the sophomoric experience."

Remembering her first driving ordeals, Hadley Holiday still blushed as she recalled her stupid mistake. "I was taking my new car through its first car wash, and I didn't even think to roll up the windows. I started playing with the radio and sat back in my seat as we rolled into the car wash. Within moments water started flooding into the car, along with tons of soap. I came out with not only a clean car inside and out, but also a great shampoo."

Although the moments that made us turn the most unusual shades of red were never repeated out loud, everyone experienced them. Because of the pressure of the freshman and sophomore years, students were more prone to embarrassing themselves. There is no need to worry if these cheek blushing experiences seem all too familiar; some day they will make great stories.

A Quarter For Your Thoughts

Now, when was it decided that change (pennies especially) was not money? It seems that the smallest form of change is now a quarter. Consider all of the purchases that you can make with a quarter: a phone call, a video game, a pen in the hall, candy, a stamp (with a nice three cents extra) or a drink in the cafeteria. There was a time when kids our age depended on every cent that they had, and we would too if a nickel would get us into a movie, and popcorn and drinks were a dime apiece. Ah- the good old days

A nice date may have cost ten dollars total back then. Nowadays, the typical date of dinner and a movie can cost the student anywhere from $15.00 (going to the dollar movies) to $60.00 (depending on where you go for dinner.) Costs of dances have also skyrocketed in the past twenty years. Events such as homecoming and prom can run students into debt with their parents for years. Analyzing a couple on a prom date:

tuxedo (rented)	$ 60
dress	$150
dinner	$ 75
limo (rented)	$ 75
corsage/boutonniere	$ 25
hotel room	$100
beverages	$ 50
prom tickets	$ 10
after-prom	$ 10
breakfast	$ 20
total	$575

There is really not much that we, as students, can do about all of this. We will continue to pay high prices because we don't have a choice. Before we know it, pennies will be obsolete, quarters will be the smallest form of change, and drinks in the cafeteria will cost a dollar.

-by Leslie Chalker

Thanks to rising inflation, pennies, nickels, and dimes are fast becoming obsolete, leaving the quarter as the smallest form of change.

Little Hall Of Little Horrors

It wasn't the smartest thing for me to do. I had decided to take a walk down to the swimming pool to do an article on the swim team. Unsure of the location of the pool, I had taken a wrong turn in one of the lower halls and had found myself in a scene right out of Night of the Living Dead.

I had seen the whole of the freshman class in a single place at once.

For an aging Senior who had just barely survived the 30 Days to a More Powerful Vocabulary regimen, the shock was overwhelming. The gudgeons were congregated around a grimy skateboard, vociferously deprecating their wretched environment, the same place that the upper-classmen revere, the place where hall monitors roam freely, the home of Lucille, Gwen, and staff, and the epitome of high schools: Shawnee Mission East.

I would have been quick to refute their claims, but the thought of being trampled by gremlins did not particularly appeal to me.

I was busy contemplating my methods of rebuttal when I suddenly realized that these unwashed lumps of baby fat would someday displace The Venerable Class of 1987, that lofty group of Seniors who had perfected the art of yearbook publishing.

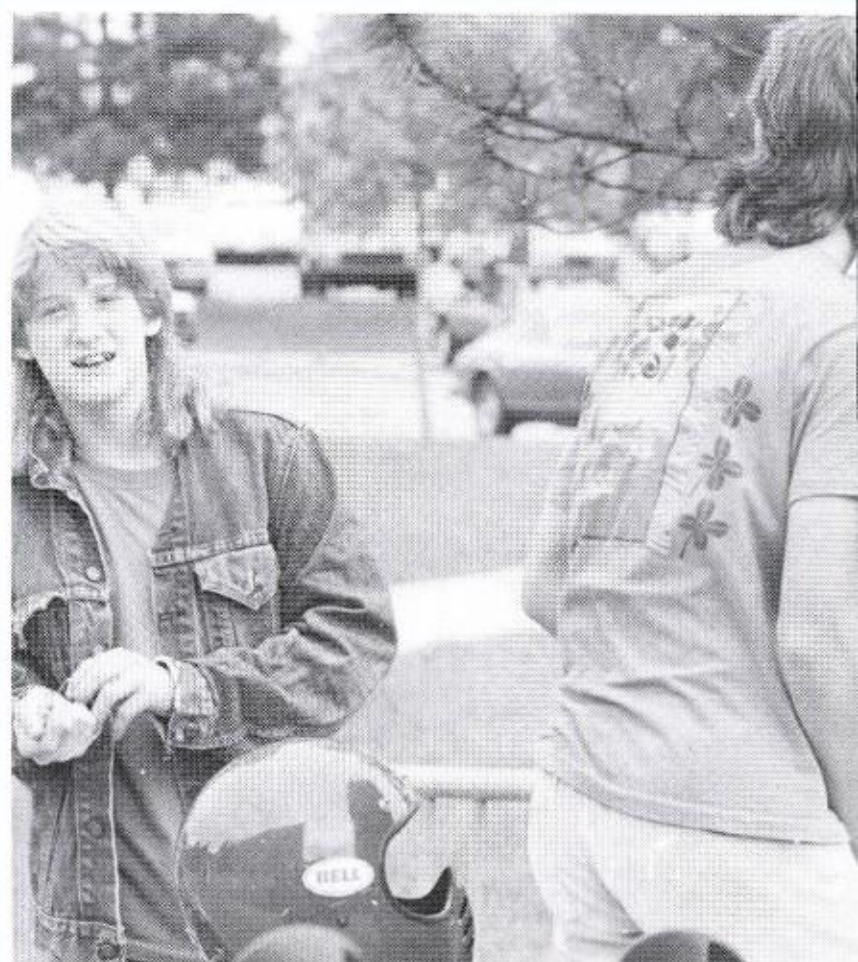

I turned to run and tell my Fellow Seniors of The Impending Doom, but I was surrounded by hundreds of screaming toddlers.

Cornered, I could do but one thing: demand to see hall passes.

The hall instantly cleared of the little hair-covered faces carrying skateboards and Barbie dolls. Light poured in through the open windows, and I heard the sound of heavenly choirs praising The Class of 1987 and its resourcefulness in solving the blights of the scholastic landscape.

I skipped happily down the hall and went immediately to the typewriter, where I composed this sublime piece of fiction.

I Pledge Allegiance

Mom, apple pie and Chevrolet are all components of a major trend currently seen throughout America, a return to patriotism. The good ol' red, white, and blue and God's country are heard on reverent lips more often. But, let's throw this trend right into Hollywood's lap: First Blood and the various Rambo movies, Rocky I-M, Top Gun and White Knights. The characters in each conflict directly with inherently evil sources (personified by an unpatriotic cop who doesn't sympathize with a grunting vet, Russia or Syria). This trend, witnessed by an increase in ticket sales, reveals our prodigal country returning to the uncle, Uncle Sam, of course. From a psychological point of view, Rambo and Rocky could be detrimental because of the blatant display of violence — even though this violence supports Uncle Sam. Yet, many people applaud the return to patriotism as a “high” for our country after the Vietnam “low.” The late 60's and 70's held a strong anti-American attitude mainly because of Vietnam. Only with the bright 80's on the horizon and the gas shortage, repression and the Democratic peanuts fading into the charged past, could a trend such as this one be allowed, even enthusiastically fuelled by the general public.

-by Julie Reimer

From one extreme to another: instead of a short, spiked cut, senior Mike Eversole opts for the Bon Jovi look.

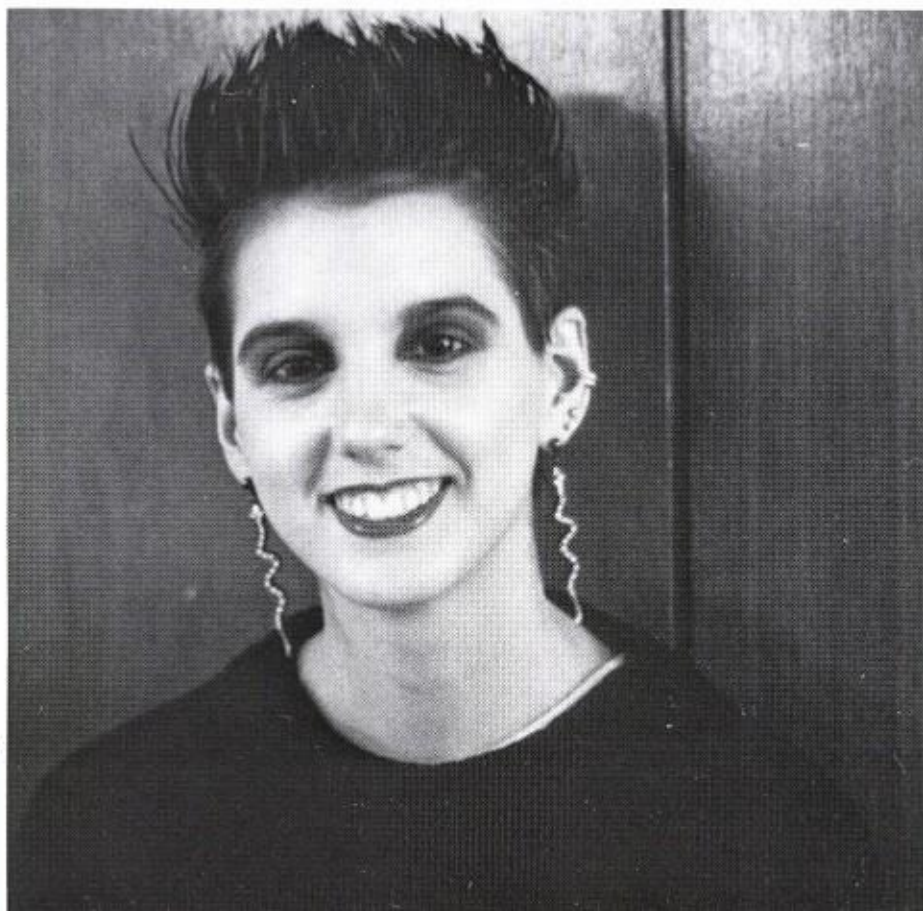

A few brave individuals, such as junior Teara Foster, coax their hair to stand on end with hair sprays and mousses. The effect is both hair-raising and eye-opening.

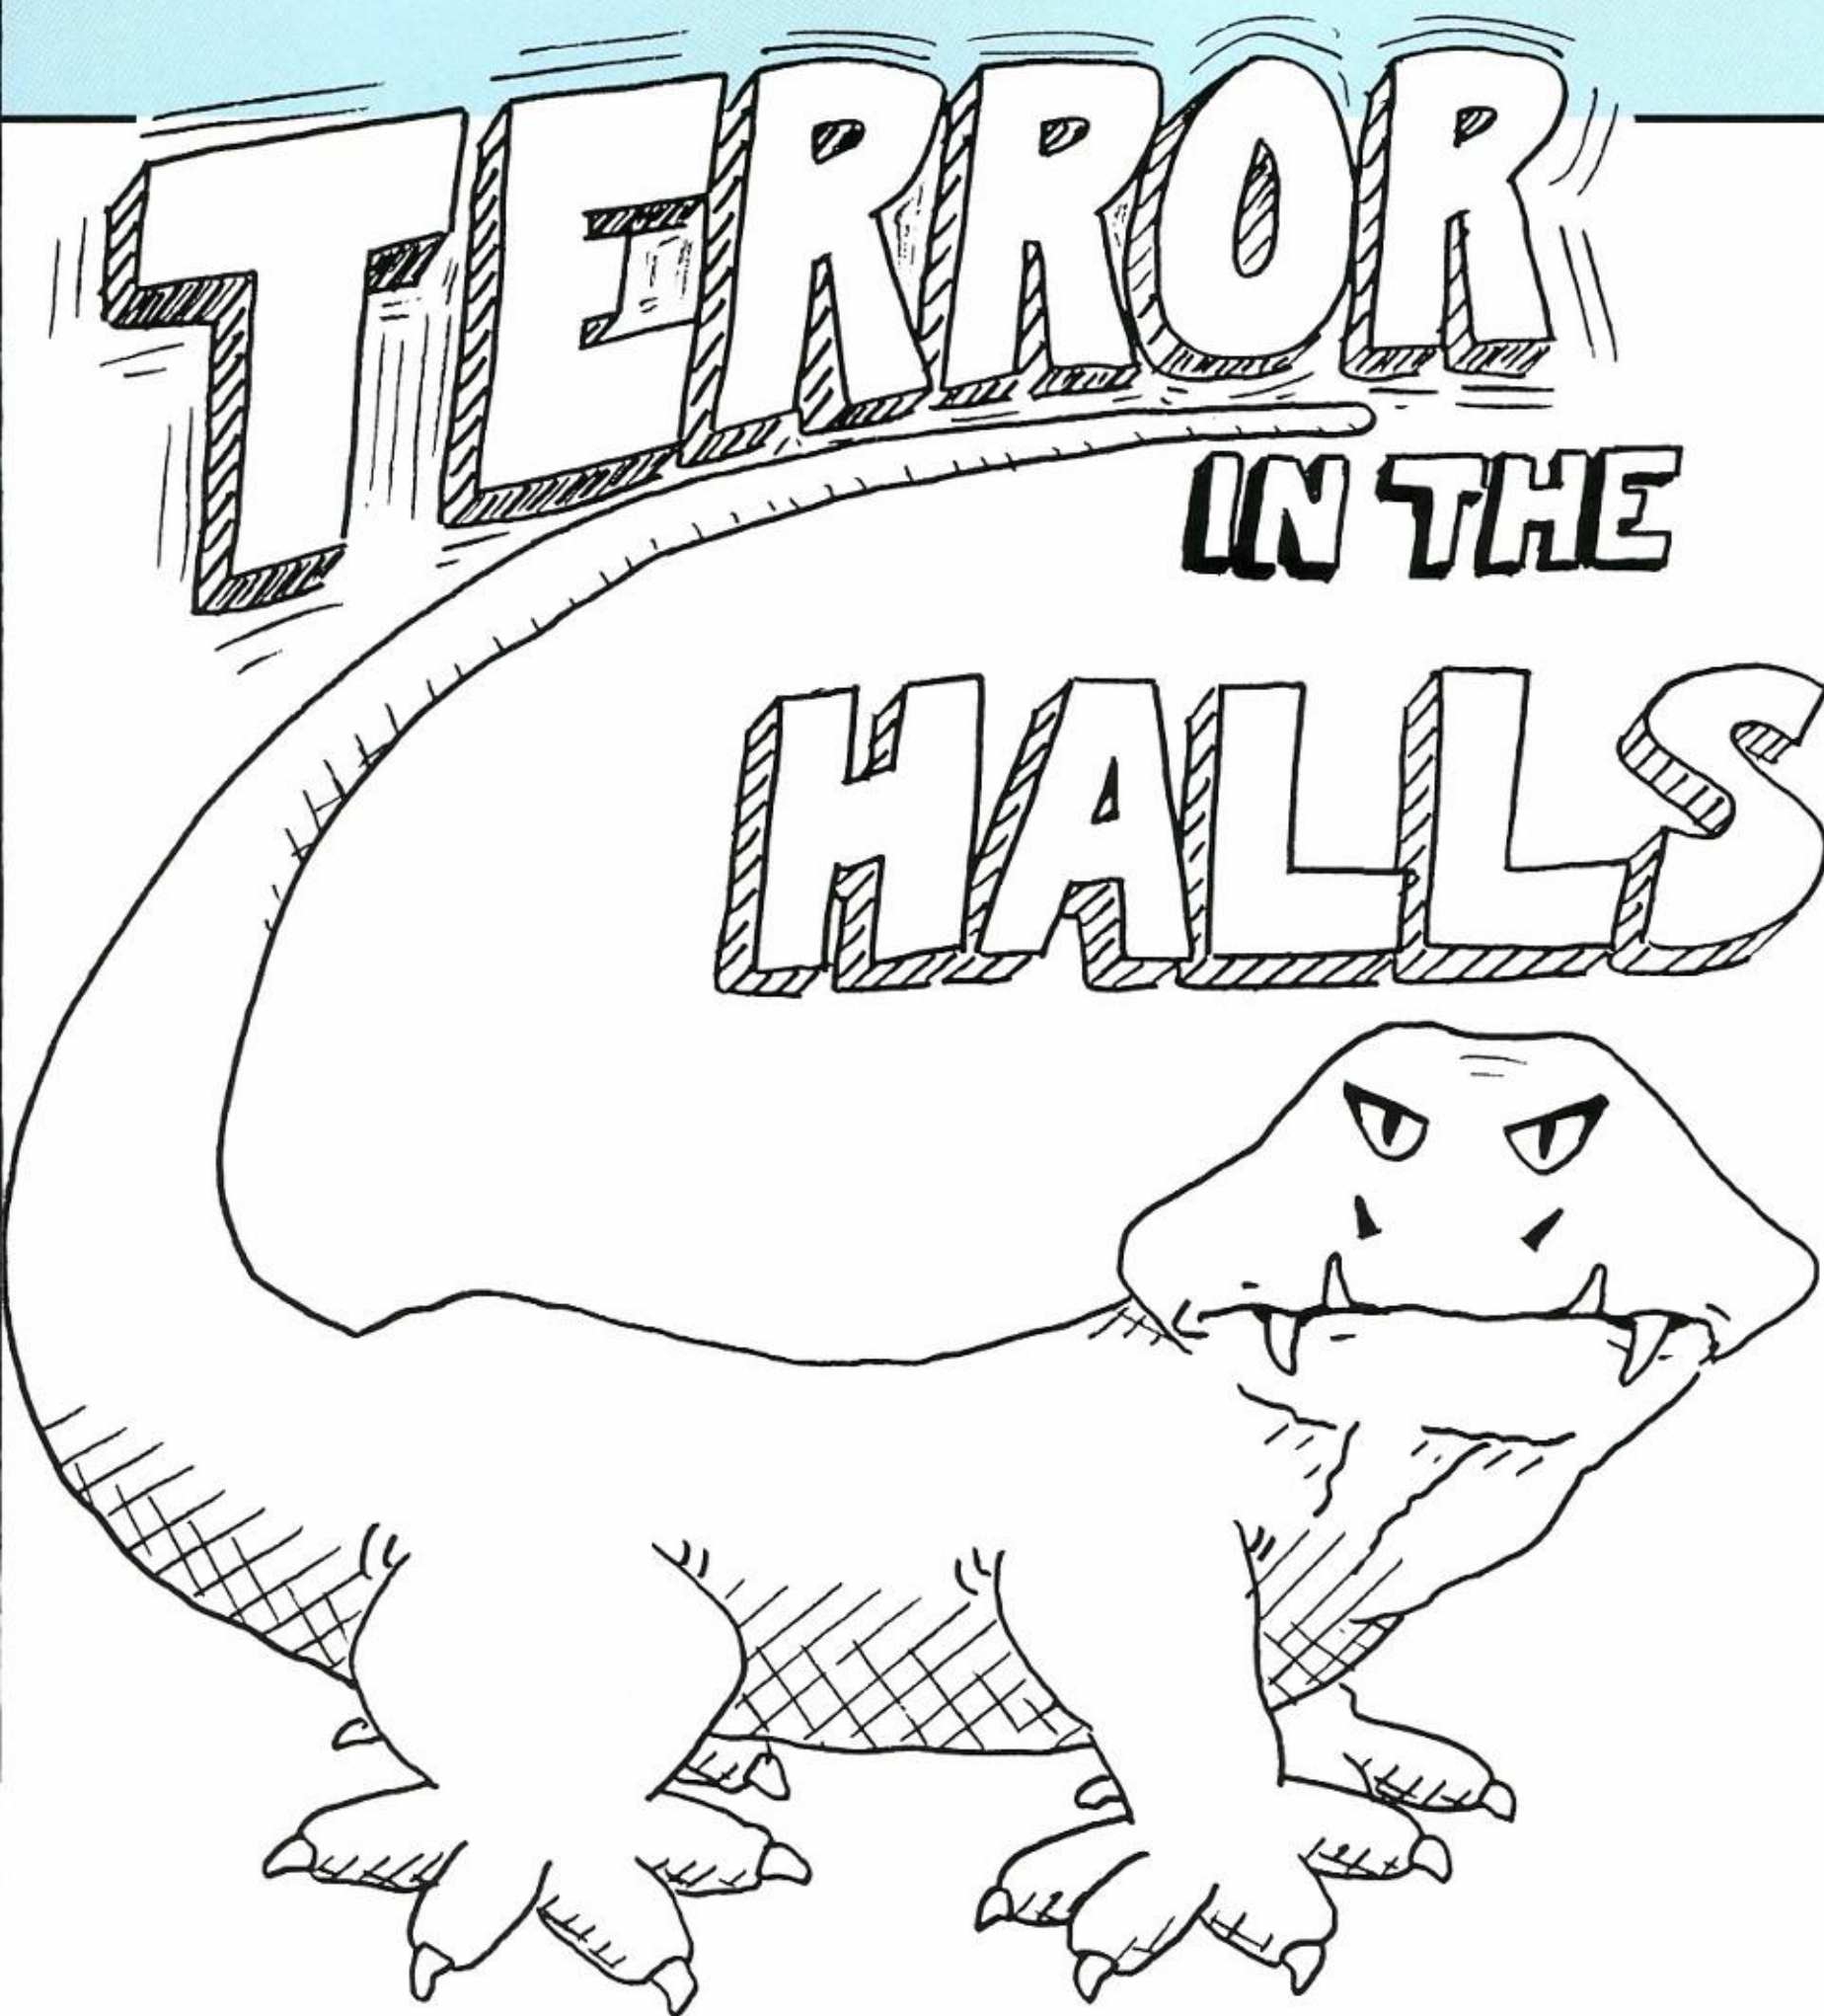

A Hairy Situation

When walking around East, you are not likely to notice the various hairstyles on the students. For the most part, the student body is fairly conservative. Most of the girls have shoulder-length hair that they perm or curl, while most guys have short hair that does not require much care. Most underclassmen have bobs and wear large bows that they always manage to color coordinate with their outfit beautifully. But these students are certainly not much to catch your eye.

The interesting ones are the few who dare to be different. Take for example the boys' swim team that went to State last year. Most of them dyed their hair blue just to show their school spirit. They also shaved part of their head leaving mohawks and rat tails to intimidate their opponents. Oddly enough, a bizarre haircut can be somewhat intimidating if you don't know the person. This is also true of the few punkers at East. The very idea that a person can force his or her hair to defy gravity by using a large amount of mousse and hair spray tends to bother me. I finally asked Teara Foster, a junior in my study hall, why it was that she liked her hair to stand on end, and she said, “Because, it's much more interesting to be different. Besides, few people can balance a piece of paper on their head the way that I can.” Senior Christy Frank has a hairstyle that appears to be unbalanced when you look at it, and I think that it has affected her brain. When asked about the subject, she said, “There's too much hair here now. I'm not used to looking down and seeing that much hair not attached to my legs.”

-by Leslie Chalker

The halls aren't as safe as they were at one time. It used to be students could walk in the halls without having to worry about being asked for a pass, but this year the administration added an unexpected element — the hall monitor.

By definition a monitor is any of several large, flesh-eating lizards of Africa, Southern Asia, and Australia. This year the monitors appeared at S.M. East. Hall monitors aren't as large as their twelve foot long counterparts in the southern hemisphere; however, some students will attest to the fact that they have the same nasty dispositions and in some cases the same scales and pointy teeth. Yet, it wasn't the scales and pointy teeth that offended most people, but the threat the monitors represented to the freedom and level of responsibility of students. It seemed ironic that in surrounding elementary schools children that were five years old were allowed to take that ever-dangerous trip to the restroom without someone watching their every step while here students that were approximately three times as old were not thought to be capable of this task.

The question is will the administration decide to put a leash on the hall monitor idea next year, or will the students have to be put on leashes and escorted by their mommies and daddies everytime they have to go potty?

Ramp Reform — The Only Alternative

What do San Francisco, Cincinnati, Vail, and Tibet have in common? All are noted for their hilly terrain and captivating atmospheres.

Unfortunately, East is not included in this brief list, not because Kansas is notoriously flat, but because the school administration has lost sight of reality.

In the past year, the administration has tried desperately to assimilate freshmen into the student body, to increase standardized test scores, to ease parking problems, and to create a New Order of Hall Monitors. The administration has made an abortive set of attempts to put East on the map, all of which ignore the end objective: to be as famous as San Francisco, Vail, Cincinnati, and Tibet.

The answer to our dilemma lies at our feet! Only the long, gently sloping hills of the north and south ramps will elevate East to its rightful position in the world.

What is needed is a coalition of open-minded students to explore and discuss all possible methods of enhancing our school's treasured ramps. Students must also be urged by the coalition to show more respect to these guardians of transportation; only the ramps allow quick and spacious travel between classes, preventing unwanted tardies and harassment by hall monitors.

Several ambitious young visionaries have already submitted their ideas for endowing the ramps with a stimulating and cosmopolitan aura. Here is a brief summary of the suggestions so far.

One student with plebeian tastes would convert the ramps into muddled hills for testing off-road trucks and motorcycles, supplementing the educational atmosphere in the process. That student would also favor the addition of a major truck stop nearby to complete the experience.

A certain adventurous and outdoorsy student would remove the walls and permit the growth of dense ground cover and tumbleweeds. To augment the appearance of the area, an obstacle course could be built that would quickly tire even the toughest Marines.

A rather affluent student, willing to sacrifice his valuable education at East, would spend large sums of money to convert the south ramp into a year-round ski slope with a complementing ski lift on the north ramp and a fully equipped condominium somewhere in between. The bored hall monitors could be put to constructive use as lift operators and ski patrolers.

These ideas are sound and wholly feasible, but only a strong student coalition and an organized push for ramp reform will topple the administration's complacency with mediocre ramps.

RAMP REFORM.
The only alternative.

It's All Downhill From Here

To some people "snow" is just another four-letter word, but for skiers, the Rocky Mountains provided an affordable and accessible outlet for the pent-up winter and spring break enthusiasm. During these breaks, Vail, Winter Park or the Summit County, including Keystone, Copper Mountain and Breckenridge, literally became Shawnee Mission Far-West. The only obstacles between them and that dreamed-about ski experience was the lack of money and snow. Details, details! With the call for above-normal precipitation, no one can blame Ma Nature for not providing the latter. The former can be much more of a problem. Yet when compared to the exotic but expensive Bahamas, Padre Islands or even the West Coast, skiing was the answer for the spring break student-on-a-budget. And are you a never-ever schusser, ready to try out your rentals on the bunny slope? Here are some tips to soften your first falls:

1. Get off the lift at the top; don't go around the corner.

2. Never trust a dirty ski instructor.
3. Take along an extra cast.
4. If at all possible, hold off on that spectacular fall until a person of the opposite sex is "close by."
5. Don't hold your poles like martini glasses.
6. Lastly, PRAY!

Bored In The U.S.A.

Click. Another minute drags by. The teacher drones on in monotonous tones. When will it end? Who really cares about scientific notation anyway? A "B Flat" sounds throughout the building, giving new meaning to the saying, "saved by the bell." The chair rakes against the floor tiles, signalling the end of class as the much relieved chemistry students stream into the hall.

Boredom: the condition of being tired with dullness, repetition, or tediousness. What makes classes so boring? Junior Bobby Boresow suggested, "When the teacher talks too much." Junior Kent Carolan, however, feels the condition ensues "when you're taking a long test, reading in class, or just sitting there being quiet."

What were the most boring classes? Trigonometry, algebra, English, and driver's education received the most complaints. The most boring hour? A student poll revealed sixth hour to be the most boring, followed closely by third and first.

The senior class appeared bored with school in general and ready for a change. This boredom occasionally carried over to the weekends. What do you do when there's nothing new or exciting left to do? Suggestions ranged from catching up on much-needed sleep and watching old movies on cable, to renting a movie, shopping, and eating.

Is this whole generation bored with life and merely going through the motions of living? Perhaps for brief moments; until a friend discovers something different, until a new movie or concert arrives, until someone has another party, or until there is a vacation from school.

You Are What You Eat

Okay, maybe the sign indicating billions served does change every time you go there, but that doesn't mean you don't know which wine to serve with chicken!

Every day, new innovations are made in the food industry, and one is constantly surrounded by a mouth-watering array of eatables including everything from sushi to sorbet. For this reason, it's important to know what's what. To find out if you can hold your own in the kitchen, take this short quiz. Score one point for every correct answer. The more points you accumulate, the higher your level of culinary cognizance.

1. A canape is:
a) a type of bed
b) an awning
c) a tiny, open-faced sandwich

2. Tofu is:
a) bean curd
b) disgusting
c) a form of martial arts
3. Lady Baltimore is:
a) the Queen of Maryland
b) a cake
c) a female orange and black bird

4. When you prepare dinner, you:
a) dial Pizza Hut delivery
b) Expertly prepare your specialty: scrambled eggs and toast
c) Make a brave attempt, but after the grilled cheese sandwiches carbonize, suggest Burger King

5. With seafood, you would serve:
a) white wine
b) red wine
c) peach cooler

6. Score an additional point if you've
a) eaten alfalfa sprouts
b) tested escargot
c) watched Julia Child
d) eaten pineapple pizza
e) eaten chocolate-covered insects

Being cool is a full time job. So is being a Lancer. Fortunately, the two jobs go together, so neither is a big strain. To prove your ability to be cool, answer the following questions.

1. Where do the cool people go for lunch?
 - A. cafeteria
 - B. McDonald's
 - C. Pizza Hut
2. How much time does the Lancer leave between waking up and leaving for school?
 - A. 1 hour
 - B. 45 minutes
 - C. 10 minutes
3. The "in" thing to do on the weekend is:
 - A. party
 - B. go bowling
 - C. cruise the mall
4. After school, you:
 - A. hit the books
 - B. rent a movie
 - C. hang out in the weight room
5. The most boring hour of the day:
 - A. math class
 - B. dinner with the folks
 - C. between 2:00 and 3:00 in the morning
6. Your favorite part of the day:
 - A. math class
 - B. dinner with the parents
 - C. between 2:00 and 3:00 am
7. Your favorite article of clothing:
 - A. a pair of boxers
 - B. your gymsuit
 - C. a neon pink sweater
8. The best thing to do on a date:
 - A. go to McDonald's
 - B. cruise the Plaza
 - C. go to a drive-in
9. When is the best time to study for a test?
 - A. right after school
 - B. the night before
 - C. the passing period before
10. Who is the most dreaded police officer?
 - A. East's own, Officer Ray

A Call For Help

"Your Excellency, I am willing to ask for the immediate and unconditional release of . . ."

Amnesty — a pardoning by the government. Prisoner of Conscience — a person imprisoned for what he believes. In many countries less democratic than the United States, people are imprisoned because their acts, based on their beliefs or values, bring them into conflict with the government of that country. Because a significant number of people believe this type of imprisonment is unfair, they have formed an organization to help fight for the rights of these innocent prisoners.

Twenty-five years ago, when London lawyer Peter Beneson learned of two law students being held in Lisbon, Portugal, (because of their advocacy of peace during a coup), he urged people to write to the government to persuade it to release these students. The government was flooded with letters, and Amnesty International began. It is not politically or religiously affiliated. It serves every race, sex, creed, or ideology as long as the prisoner has not been involved in any kind of violence in resistance to his oppression. It is based internationally in London, England, with chapters all over the world. The organization won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1977 and has adopted the symbol of a barbed wire-wrapped candle.

The letters people send are far from hate mail; rather, they are painstakingly polite. They are addressed to the most powerful officials of the country, and they explain why the imprisonment is unfair. They are not an attempt to criticize but an attempt to convince the government to compromise for the sake of its reputation. A trapped animal that feels threatened will come out of the corner fighting. But, if it is spoken to calmly, it can be coaxed out of the corner. This ideology is the core of the letters the members send to the countries.

Students write letters to governments of such countries as Yugoslavia and Sri Lanka to inform the leaders that the issue is not forgotten and neither are the people. By cautiously applying pressure on these officials, Amnesty can help. According to one organizer, senior Stephanie Wright, not all the prisoners are released, but conditions may change as a result of the letters and attention. Fair and prompt trials, better food rations, and an end to torture are a few results.

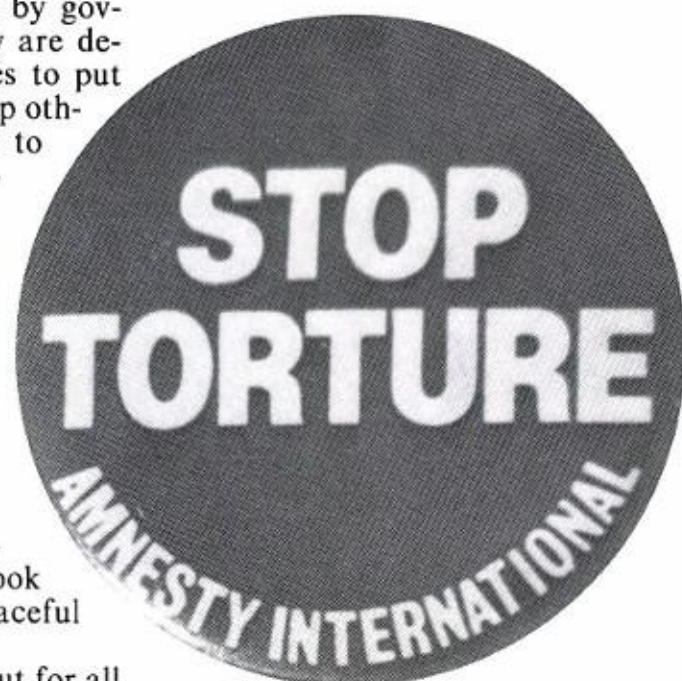

Not all letters are interpreted by governments in the same way; many are destroyed or ignored. Amnesty tries to put the issues into perspective and help others to understand. Its purpose is to persuade with kindness and Amnesty is not above assuming an obsequious posture, if the leader will respond positively to it.

The organization at East is still relatively small with about 10-20 people attending meetings. Laura Rozen, an individual member of the national organization receives the information about prisoners and conveys this to interested students. They are given a guide book on how to write appropriately peaceful yet powerful letters.

"The candle burns not for us, but for all those whom we fail to rescue from prison who were shot on the way to the prison who were tortured, who were kidnapped who 'disappeared.' That's what the candle is for." — Beneson

Trendy

There will always be those people willing to go to any extreme to make a fashion statement, and those who play it safe in an oxford and worn jeans. There have been no completely new looks at East, but instead, a take-off on former fashions. The rebellious punk image has changed from mohawks to black leather jackets with a symbolic message across the back. The delicate English countryside look of Laura Ashley has channeled into the Limited's "Outback Red." Chris Cambern said, "Fashion at East is a joke. There is no one at East who is fashionable — everyone is trendy." Whether or not the clothes we wear are true fashion or passing trends, Annette Walton concluded, "Everyone tries to project an image. Some just fail more obviously than others."

A Farewell Letter

I'm too young to retire. This job is too much excitement and fun to quit, so I am graduating. There is no way anyone could have had a more varied, interesting, fascinating nursing career. I will miss all of you and I know you will miss me, — interrupting your classrooms to deliver lunch money, cancel fake aunts' funerals, retrieving car keys for parents, snooping in your attendance books, and those thousands of messages for kids and those horrid blue assignment request sheets.

I'll also miss Crawford putting a drill under his thumb nail, Biology sending me the girl who fell off her stool onto a cactus, Auto Tech and the boy who dumped carburetor cleaner down over his head, Gasper's girl with a needle thru her thumb, Sulzen's fun saw and sander hands, the kid who fell asleep in band and let his tuba fall on the head of the horn player in front of him, the two boys fist fighting over the color of a car and falling thru the north ramp windows, Howard's

Drill team girl who upset a piano and broke her leg in the big gym.

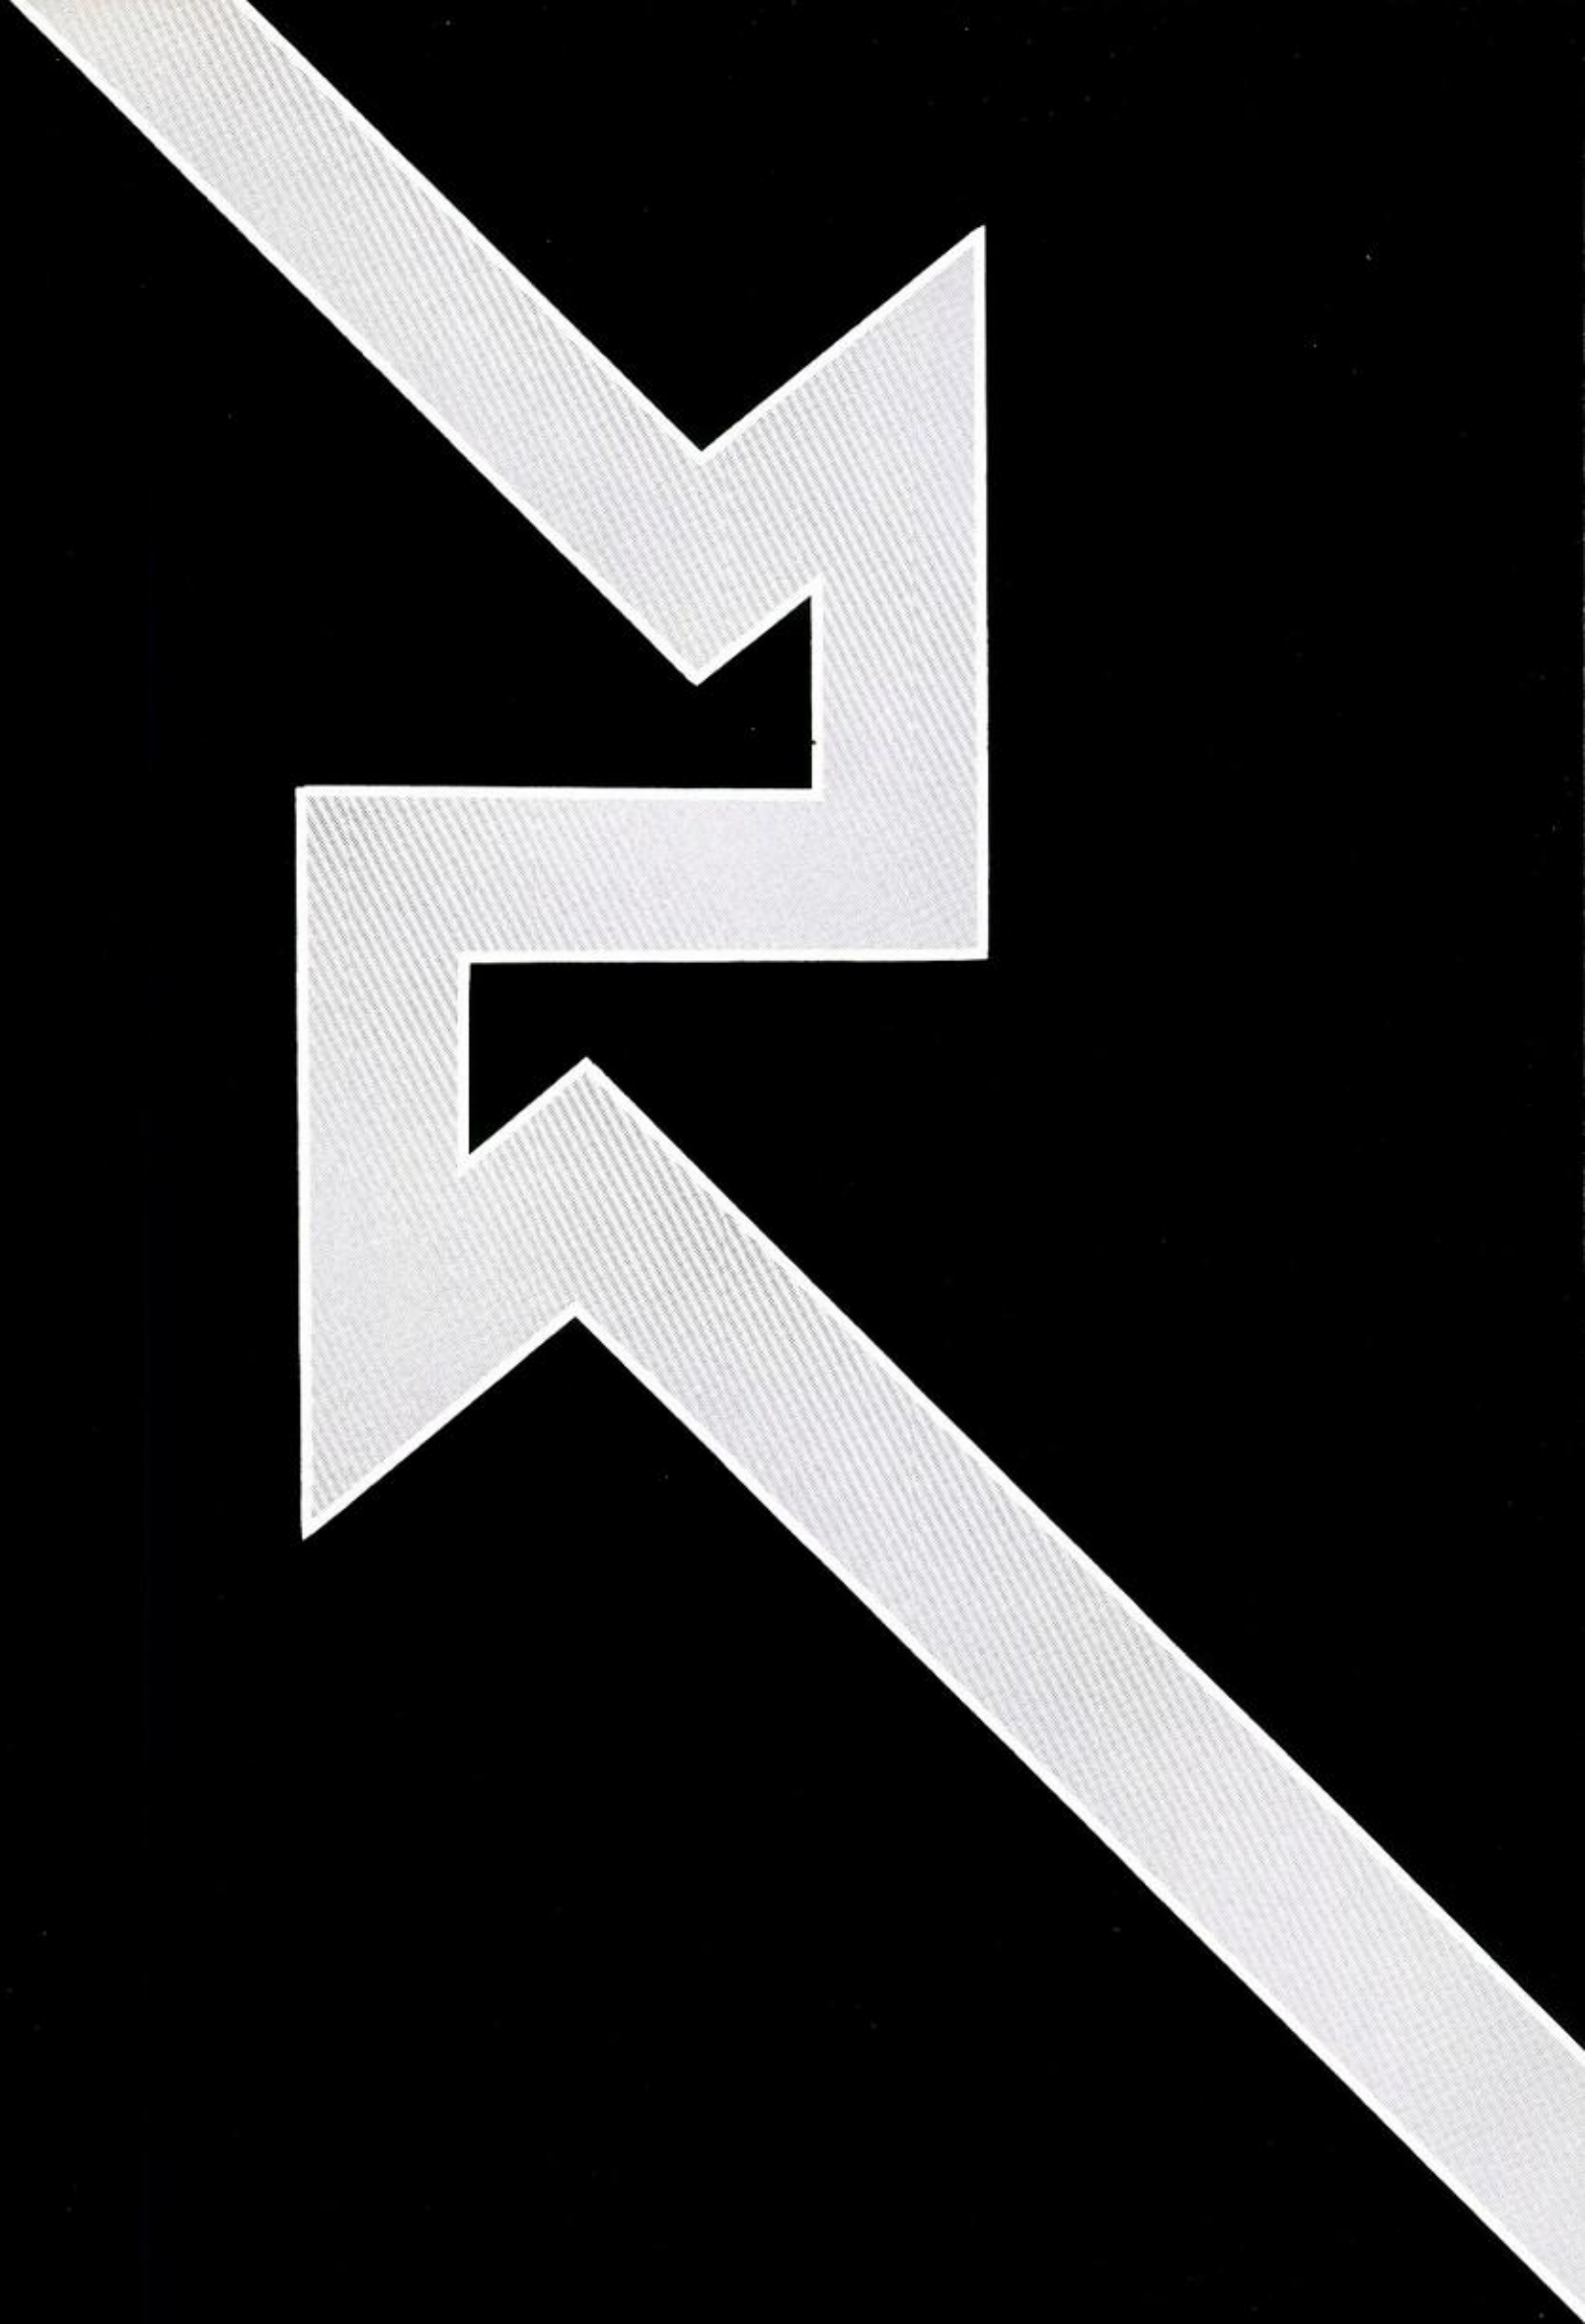

Remember when they set the wrestling mats on fire, turned loose pigs in the cafeteria — and those crickets!!! — A teacher's water balloon down on the head of smoker, Newcomer-Oh, the stories I could tell about Art! Just one, or two. A kid Art caught smoking stuck the lighted cigarette in his back pocket, so Art just stood there talking to the kid until the cigarette got too hot and started burning, or the time he handed me pants to sew up for a kid (he'd parked the kid in a janitor's closet) but he left the building without telling me where he'd left the pantless kid. I'll remember the formaldehyde bottle exploding in the Science wing, the Long twins setting off tear gas in the Study Halls, the hefty girl who sat on a bathroom sink and broke it off, sending water everywhere, the kid who took a dare and ate 34 little cups of peanut butter during lunch and expected me to clean up the mess, dear, dear Mr. Rees and his dirty glasses, and the girl who came to my office hysterical because some boy had kissed her in the elevator and she was afraid she might be pregnant. Remember the kids waxing the South ramp and it was so slick we had to close it for the day?

I could write a book! Such fun, crazy days all woven into and mixed with the tragedies of life and even those little tears about not making cheerleader, lost loves, flunked tests, fights with teachers and run-ins with vice principals.

Despite all these never-ending episodes, when you have enough credits, it's time to graduate. I'll be back to visit.

*Love,
M. Dorn*

TO RETAIN NORMALCY

Between the 1985-6 and 1986-7 school years, East underwent a major shift of power: the school administration saw change.

Most students felt that the world had come to an end; East was no longer the same as it had been. Oddly enough, most students would be surprised to learn that very little had changed at the top over the summer.

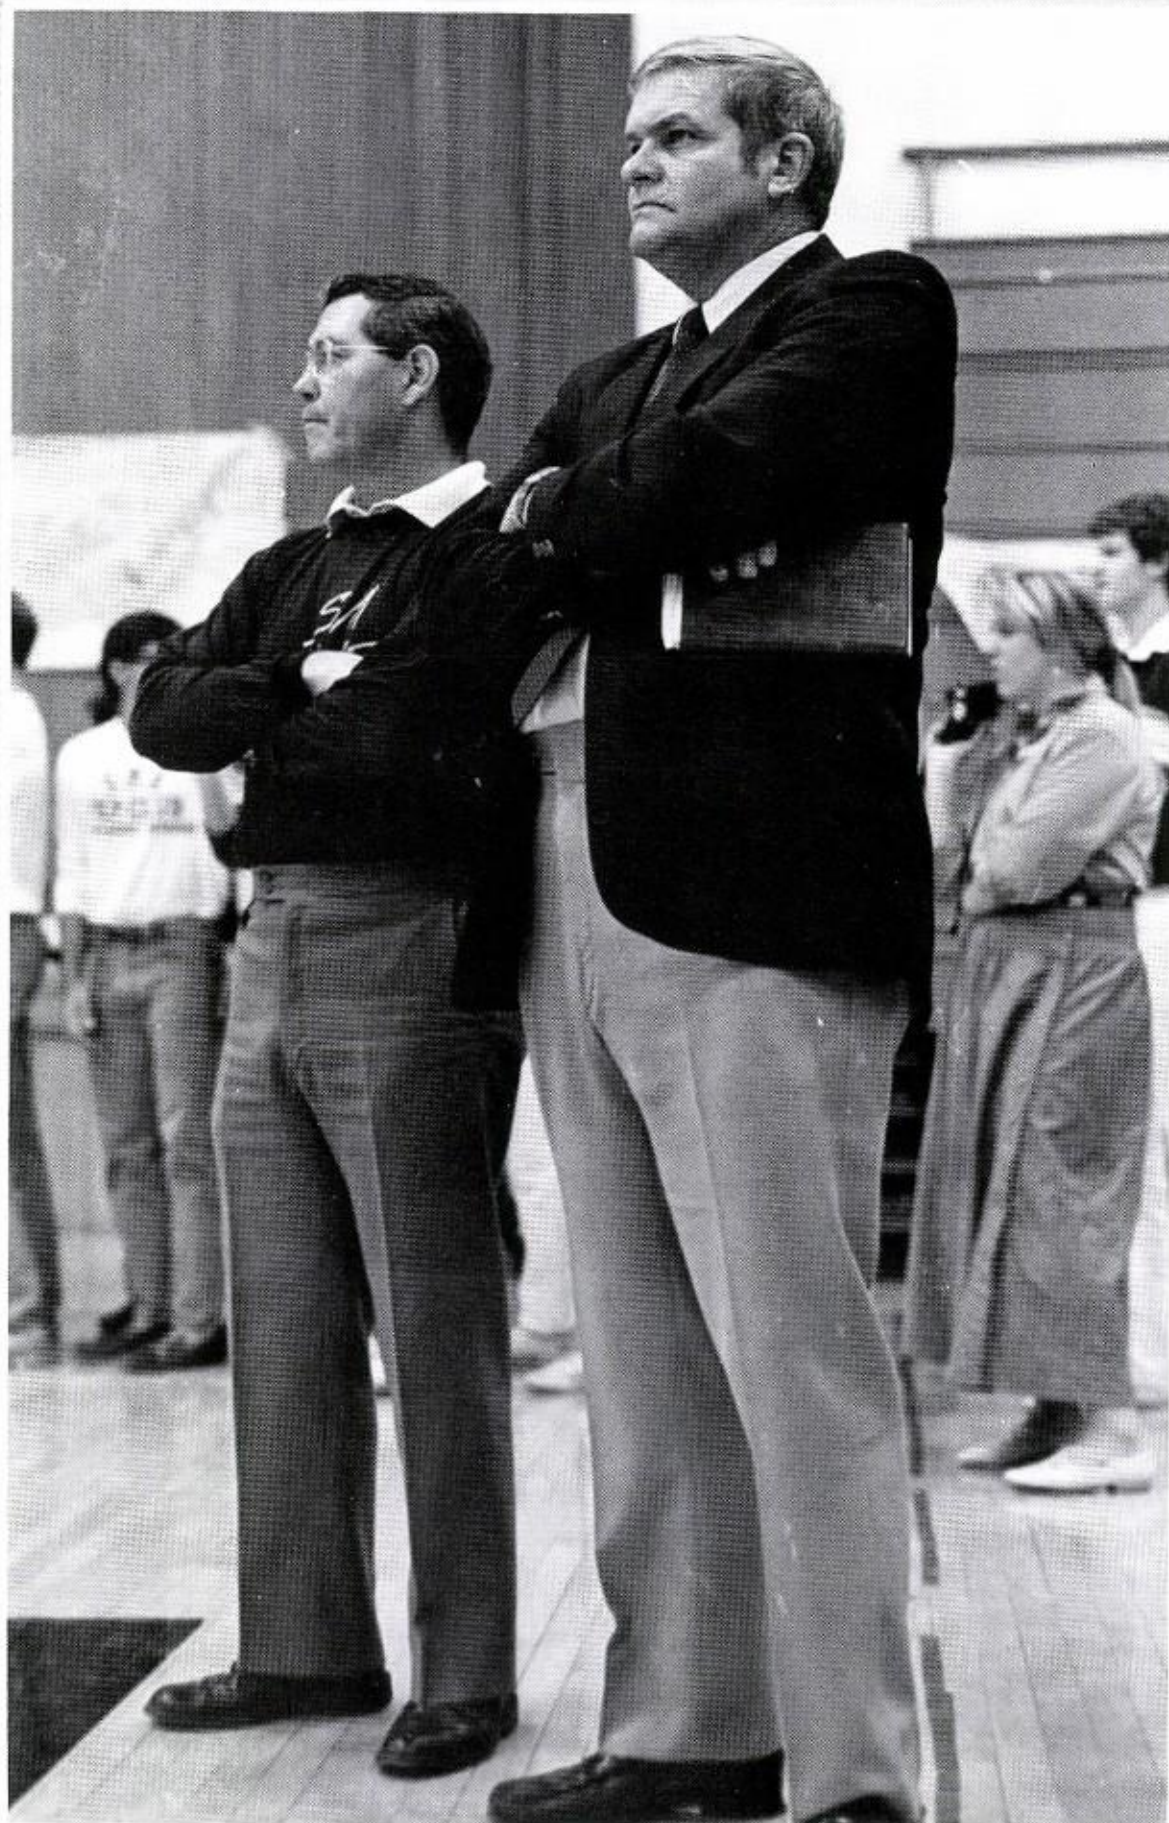

Dr. Stanberry, principal, said, "The biggest change this year was the reorganization of the district. East didn't need a quick change; it just happened."

Stanberry pointed out that the primary domestic policy of the administration was based on listening to the students and faculty and observing the existing educational processes.

Dr. Jacobs, associate principal, elaborated: "We get input from the students and teachers about what is successful and what is not. The administration works to maintain the successful programs and to refine the problem areas until we reach a good environment for students." He added: "We look at our options and try to address the needs of the school and its students."

These pragmatic practices have helped to ease East through the torture of reorganization without a whimper, achieving success and normalcy.

Do Not Go Gentle Into That Good Night

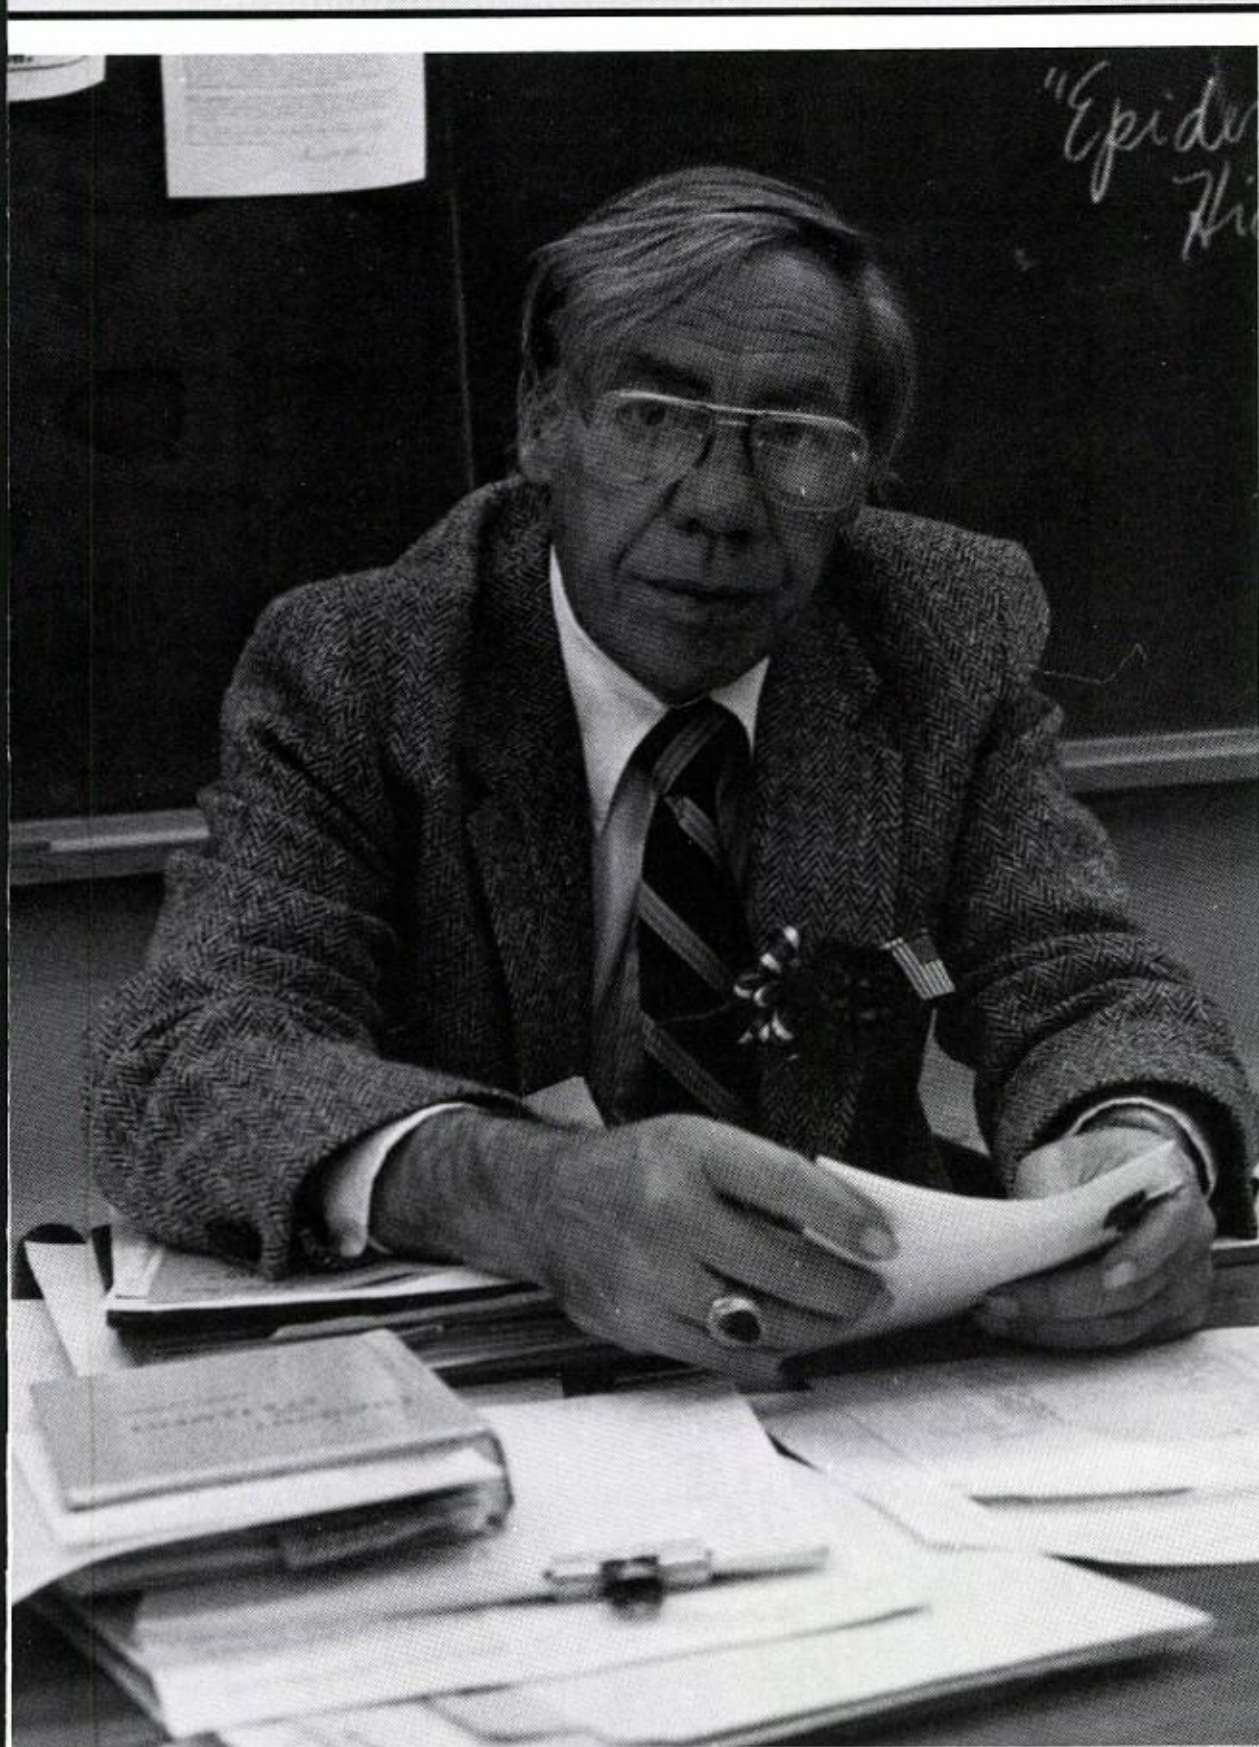

The death of Everett Rees has left a void in the lives of many people. His life was so diverse and filled that it is clearly impossible to describe it fully. Each individual who came in contact with him has unique stories to tell and memories to enjoy. And one person can in no way attempt to summarize Rees as a person, for he was a collection of many special qualities. Throughout his life he performed many roles and each became a part of his character. He was a teacher, a coach, a sponsor, a bridge master, and a Welshman to name a few. But most simply put, he was Everett Rees.

Students of his will hardly forget the pet names, witticisms and mannerisms which were traditions in his classroom. Few will forget the notorious "rude!" Likewise will the memories of Thirty Days . . . and Thought and Statement be difficult to erase. Players of his will remember his encouragements and even occasional admonitions for leaving equipment lying about the field. And his Categories players will certainly remember the tournaments in Wichita and Topeka and the times before the cameras at Mohawk. Still other people will remember his jokes and sarcastic replies.

But perhaps the most telling of his qualities was his ability to befriend others. Scattered around his house were letters from former students sending word of their whereabouts and recent accomplishments. Oftentimes graduates appeared on his doorstep to share a story. Each of these visits or letters was testament to the friendships he had formed.

Though Rees has died, he has not left us. He endures in the memories of those who knew him. Those qualities which made him unique have been carried on by his many students, high school and otherwise. For Rees was not just a high school teacher, but rather a teacher of all those who came in contact with him. He taught through his example of high standards, commitment and respect. Though his death is a loss, his life was a gain, for all of his students and friends are "more" for knowing Everett Rees. The values he stood for endure in all those he taught.

Across The Pond And Back Again

Spending six months in Westin-Super-Mare, England, as an exchange teacher, Mr. Burkholder discovered a new attitude and eagerness to learn among English students. Just twenty miles from Bristol and one hundred twenty miles from London, the warm city of 50,000 is a resort town for the English who flock there and triple its population during the summer months. "I remember the beautiful skylights across the Bristol Channel," said Mr. Burkholder, who found the city more than welcoming.

While there, he lived in a nice home with his wife and daughters and taught chemistry and integrated science in a school system much different from ours. The school system in England is composed of years or forms; the first year is for eleven year olds; the second is for twelve year olds; and so on. Before age thirteen or the third year, a student will take the basic required courses, and at the early age of fourteen the students must make the decision as to what will best aide them in their careers.

In this learning process the students are not tested regularly, but they take one exam at the end of a completed course. Otherwise the students receive grades based entirely on effort. "This system is possible," said Mr. Burkholder, "because of their intense desire to learn." Students work at their own pace and are given a syllabus outlining the course and its requirements. Mr. Burkholder was amazed at the extra hours put in by his students at the libraries researching their daily class material. They are not given text books as we know them, but instead they find the resources needed. Employment is the student's goal after the age of sixteen. They are motivated to learn for the sake of learning, not for the sake of a letter grade. "I was impressed by their time spent 'revising' (which is their word for studying) each day. Each course met only twice a week for seventy minutes, and they were always prepared." Mr. Burkholder seemed thrilled by the students and their eagerness to "work like the devil."

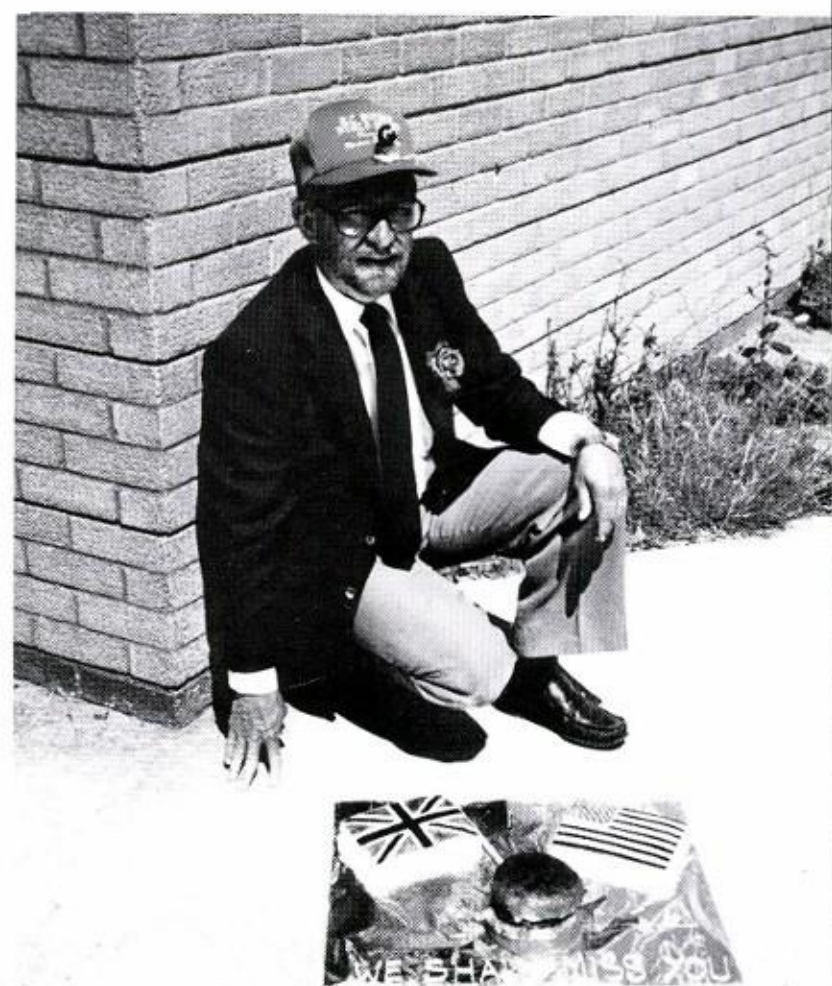

However, it took about three weeks for him to change the image many students had of Americans — as wealthy and flamboyant. Mr. Burkholder had good memories of his students, especially his tutor group which met each day and functioned like a homeroom. "It was really easy to grow attached to these kids," said Mr. Burkholder. He was amazed at the ideas of America the students held, their only source of knowledge being television shows like Dallas and Miami Vice. Disillusioned by American teenage violence, one student sincerely asked him, "Do you carry a gun to school?" Although they had many questions when he arrived in Westin-Super-Mare, England, Mr. Burkholder felt as if he had left them with "a good feeling about Americans and especially about Kansas City."

-by Shana Stephens

Pictured with his good-bye cakes at the end of his British teaching career, Mr. Burkholder spent 10 months breaking the barrier between these two historically linked cultures.

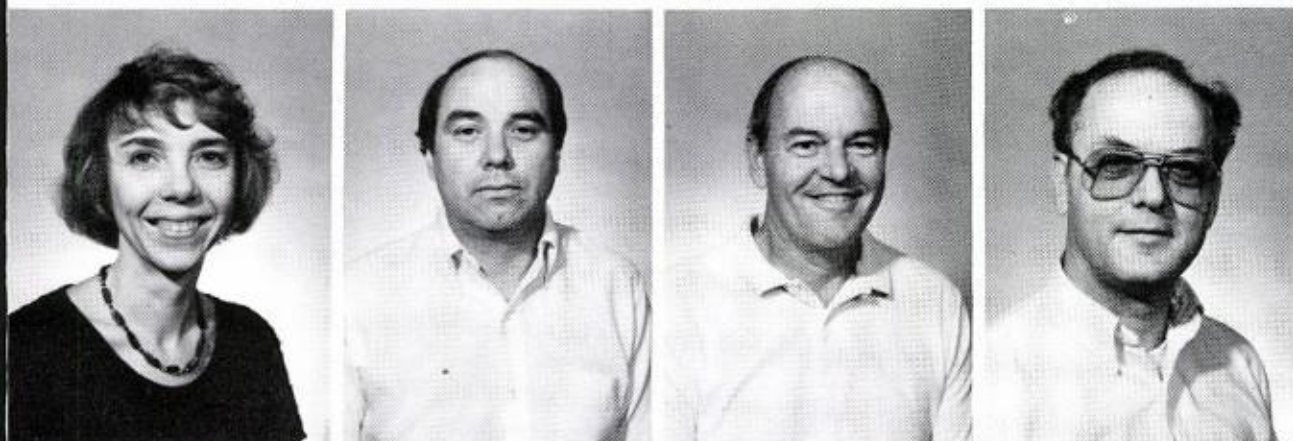

Nearing the end of his stay in England, Mr. Burkholder and his students celebrate a year of fun, hard-work, and special friendships that stretch over the ocean.

“Shadows Make A Painting”

Art — complete self expression. Delsarte said, “The object of art is to crystallize emotion into thought and then fix it in form.” However, Jeff Hopkins has a more philosophical outlook on art. He says, “Taking art is a great way to pick up chicks.” Many students at East enjoy expressing themselves through art. “Personal expression is important,” Dawn Brown explained. “I think here at East people find they can express themselves easily.” Art teacher Susan Brantman said, “We have some super artists here with a lot of talent.” She stresses to her students the necessity to think divergently, the ability to solve problems with no right or wrong answers. Christie Adrian concluded, “Good art is complete self expression — all coming from you.”

Class Of 2000

"Preschool is a lot easier than high school," explained Diana Ott, but in high school, one can learn about preschool. The students in exploring childhood studied the thought processes of children and practiced teaching skills three times a week during school hours.

The course was designed "to give students experience in working with children, and by doing so, to learn about themselves," claimed Ms. Brandt, instructor.

The two classes were composed of 40 junior and senior girls. On Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays they went to field sites, or preschools. As teachers at their sites, they were responsible for lesson plans and activity organization. On some days they acted as teachers' aides and helped the instructors at the school; they had good experiences as well as trying ones.

On Ott's first day at her preschool the children walked to a doughnut shop as a field trip. On the way a little girl decided she had to go to the bathroom, and the teachers asked Diana to carry the child back to school. "I had to run back to the school and I was so scared . . ." but all went well.

Sometimes the students make exceptional breakthroughs with shy or withdrawn children. The instructors at Kelly Moore's field site were shocked when one such child said "Good morning, Miss Moore" to her when she walked in. The child had not said so many words at school during the entire previous year. "It was really quite an accomplishment for me," Moore stated.

Not every day on the job was exceptional, but every day was different. The students enjoyed the variety of leaving school to be with children and practicing skills at the same time. The practicality and easy application of the material attracted the students, many of whom mentioned how exploring childhood has helped them choose career directions as well.

Academic Anecdotes

Anecdote: a short account of an interesting or humorous incident.

Interesting? . . . Humorous? Well . . . certainly not words most of us habitually use to describe our teachers. But why not? It turns out that the faculty are a pretty zany bunch of characters. For instance, when asked to relate a humorous incident from their teaching experience, certain members of the teaching staff came up with episodes having more than a hint of hilarity.

English teacher Mr. Boley, for example, recalled lecturing to a class composed entirely of sophomore girls. "We were discussing a book, and every few minutes there would be an outburst of giggles from the entire class. The laughter would subside, but then would begin again, in a few moments. I began to wonder if I had spilled food on my shirt, or if I were unzipped. I finally discovered the reason for the giggles. A girl sitting near the window had been using a mirrored compact to shine beams of light on me. She had been clever enough not to shine the light in my eyes, making me notice her. Apparently, the laughter was due to the fact that certain parts of my anatomy which she chose to "highlight" were funnier than others!"

Science teacher Mrs. Moore said, "The worst and funniest day I've ever had was during a chemistry lab. All of a sudden, two boys began a fist fight. Another ran a glass rod through his hand, and when I turned around, I saw a girl standing on top of the counter screaming at the top of her lungs because she'd broken a thermometer, and mercury was running everywhere. The problem was deciding which situation to take care of first!"

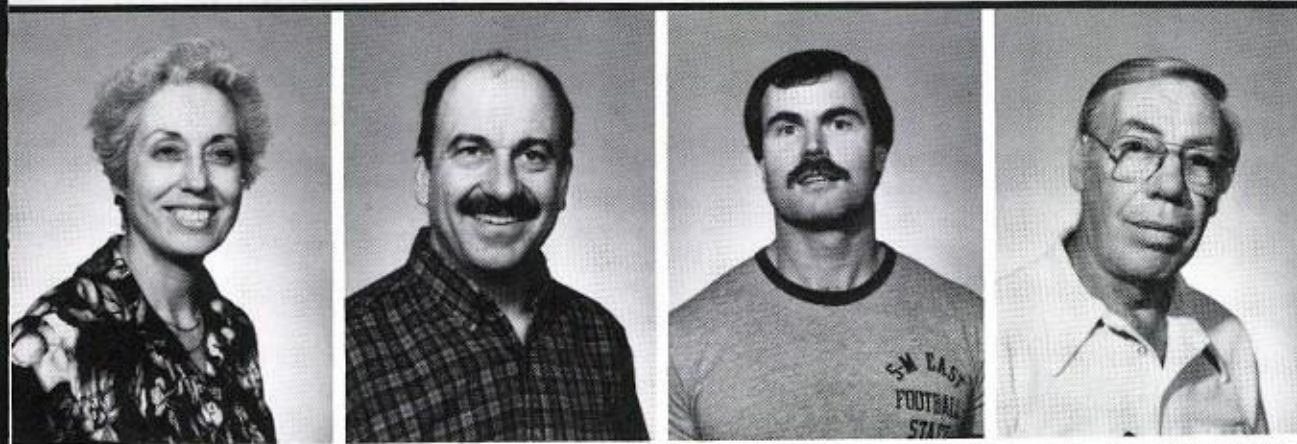

Mr. Crawford, art instructor, remembered a student who fainted on top of his desk, "A lab assistant of mine was hammering a piece of metal and had hit her finger. She came up to my desk, held out her purple finger, and then, really saw it for the first time. The next thing I knew, her eyes had rolled to the back of her head, and she was sprawled on top of my desk."

Math teacher, Mr. Royer, recalled an embarrassing incident: "I came to school, I sat down, my pants ripped. I had no thread, so I made use of the only means at my disposal — the stapler. I went into the bathroom and stapled the inside seam of my pants. It worked, but for the rest of the day I felt a peculiar 'twang' with every step I took."

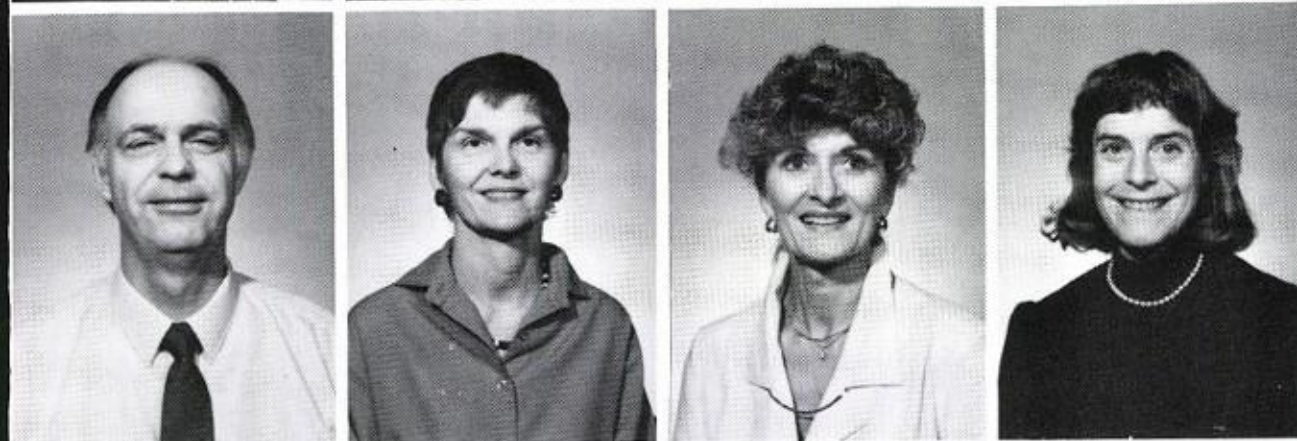

And then, there's Mrs. Krebs' story: "Sometimes, when I'm making an announcement, what I'm thinking doesn't come out the way I intend. For instance, once I was relaying a phone message to a science teacher to let him know that Fluffy, the rabbit, had gotten out of its cage. The message came over the intercom: 'Mr. Fox, your Fluffy is out!' "

Retirement In Sight

Everything is ready for the big game. The goals are down, the bleachers are unfolded, and, shining under the bright lights, the floor lies waiting to be trampled by the players. How did the gym come to be in this state of preparedness? Did some magical elf appear, say a few powerful words, then vanish, leaving the room transformed? Of course not; all the work was done by a team — not one of the two basketball teams that later will play, drawing a crowd of students from both schools, but one made up of custodians, whose playing court is not restricted by the floor's painted lines.

Gerald Pittman, a member of that custodial team for the past seven years, will not be returning next year. His position in after-school workouts was "Mainfloor, South." Pittman, retiring at age sixty-five, didn't have any regrets about his time at East. "I've really enjoyed working with the kids," Pittman admitted. He has also become very attached to the teachers, especially those in the English department, and claims, "There is not one I dislike." Pittman found fellowship in the group of custodians, something that had been lacking in his previous employment: delivering cars for General Motors, a job he held for thirty-one years before retiring. While working for GM, he spent much time alone on the road. East provided a different atmosphere for Pittman, who commented, "I like being indoors."

Linda Thompson, one of the English teachers whose room fell under Pittman's jurisdiction, recalled a conversation with him: "He said, 'You can tell much about what goes on in a classroom by what is left in the evening.' I guess that's right." Thompson explained that in addition to being always friendly, Pittman "really took pride in the building." She remembered that everything was always very well done. "He was sick for a while; I could tell he was gone," Thompson said. Those who knew Pittman, students and teachers alike, appreciated his diligence, respect, and belief in what he did. He will be missed.

I don't think I tell you often enough,
But in our laughs, there's so much love!
I'm not sure how I've made it through,
And then I realize it's because of you.
Senior year's just around the bend,
But I'll love it cuz you're my best friends!

Marsh- hey ya big silly!
we never did get together this school year. I want to go on another dark and lonely this summer!

Remember, all they do in Hell is drink & smoke pot, so lets go cude! ♡ Ya

COLOPHONE

The 29th volume of the Shawnee Mission East HauberK was printed by Josten's Printing and Publishing Co., Topeka, Kansas, under the advice of Josten's representative, Ed Villwock. 2000 copies of the book were made and all copy was composed and arranged by the HauberK staff using standard 3-C work sheets.

The cover is a Craftline black No. 535 with a Spanish grain No. 1257. The cover, division pages, and all artwork were designed by staff artist, Jeff Onnen. A blue silkscreen No. 359 was applied to the cover for the arrows and title which were also embossed for a raised appearance. Endsheets are a steel gray No. 289.

The body copy and headlines in the opening color pages, activity, athletic, faculty, and Mini Mag sections are all Times Roman print, Style 45. The caption copy is Times Roman bold, Style 46 and the bylines are Times Roman italic, Style 45i. The Background percentages are all 10, 30, 60, and 100% black except for spot color sections using 10, 30, and 60% blue.

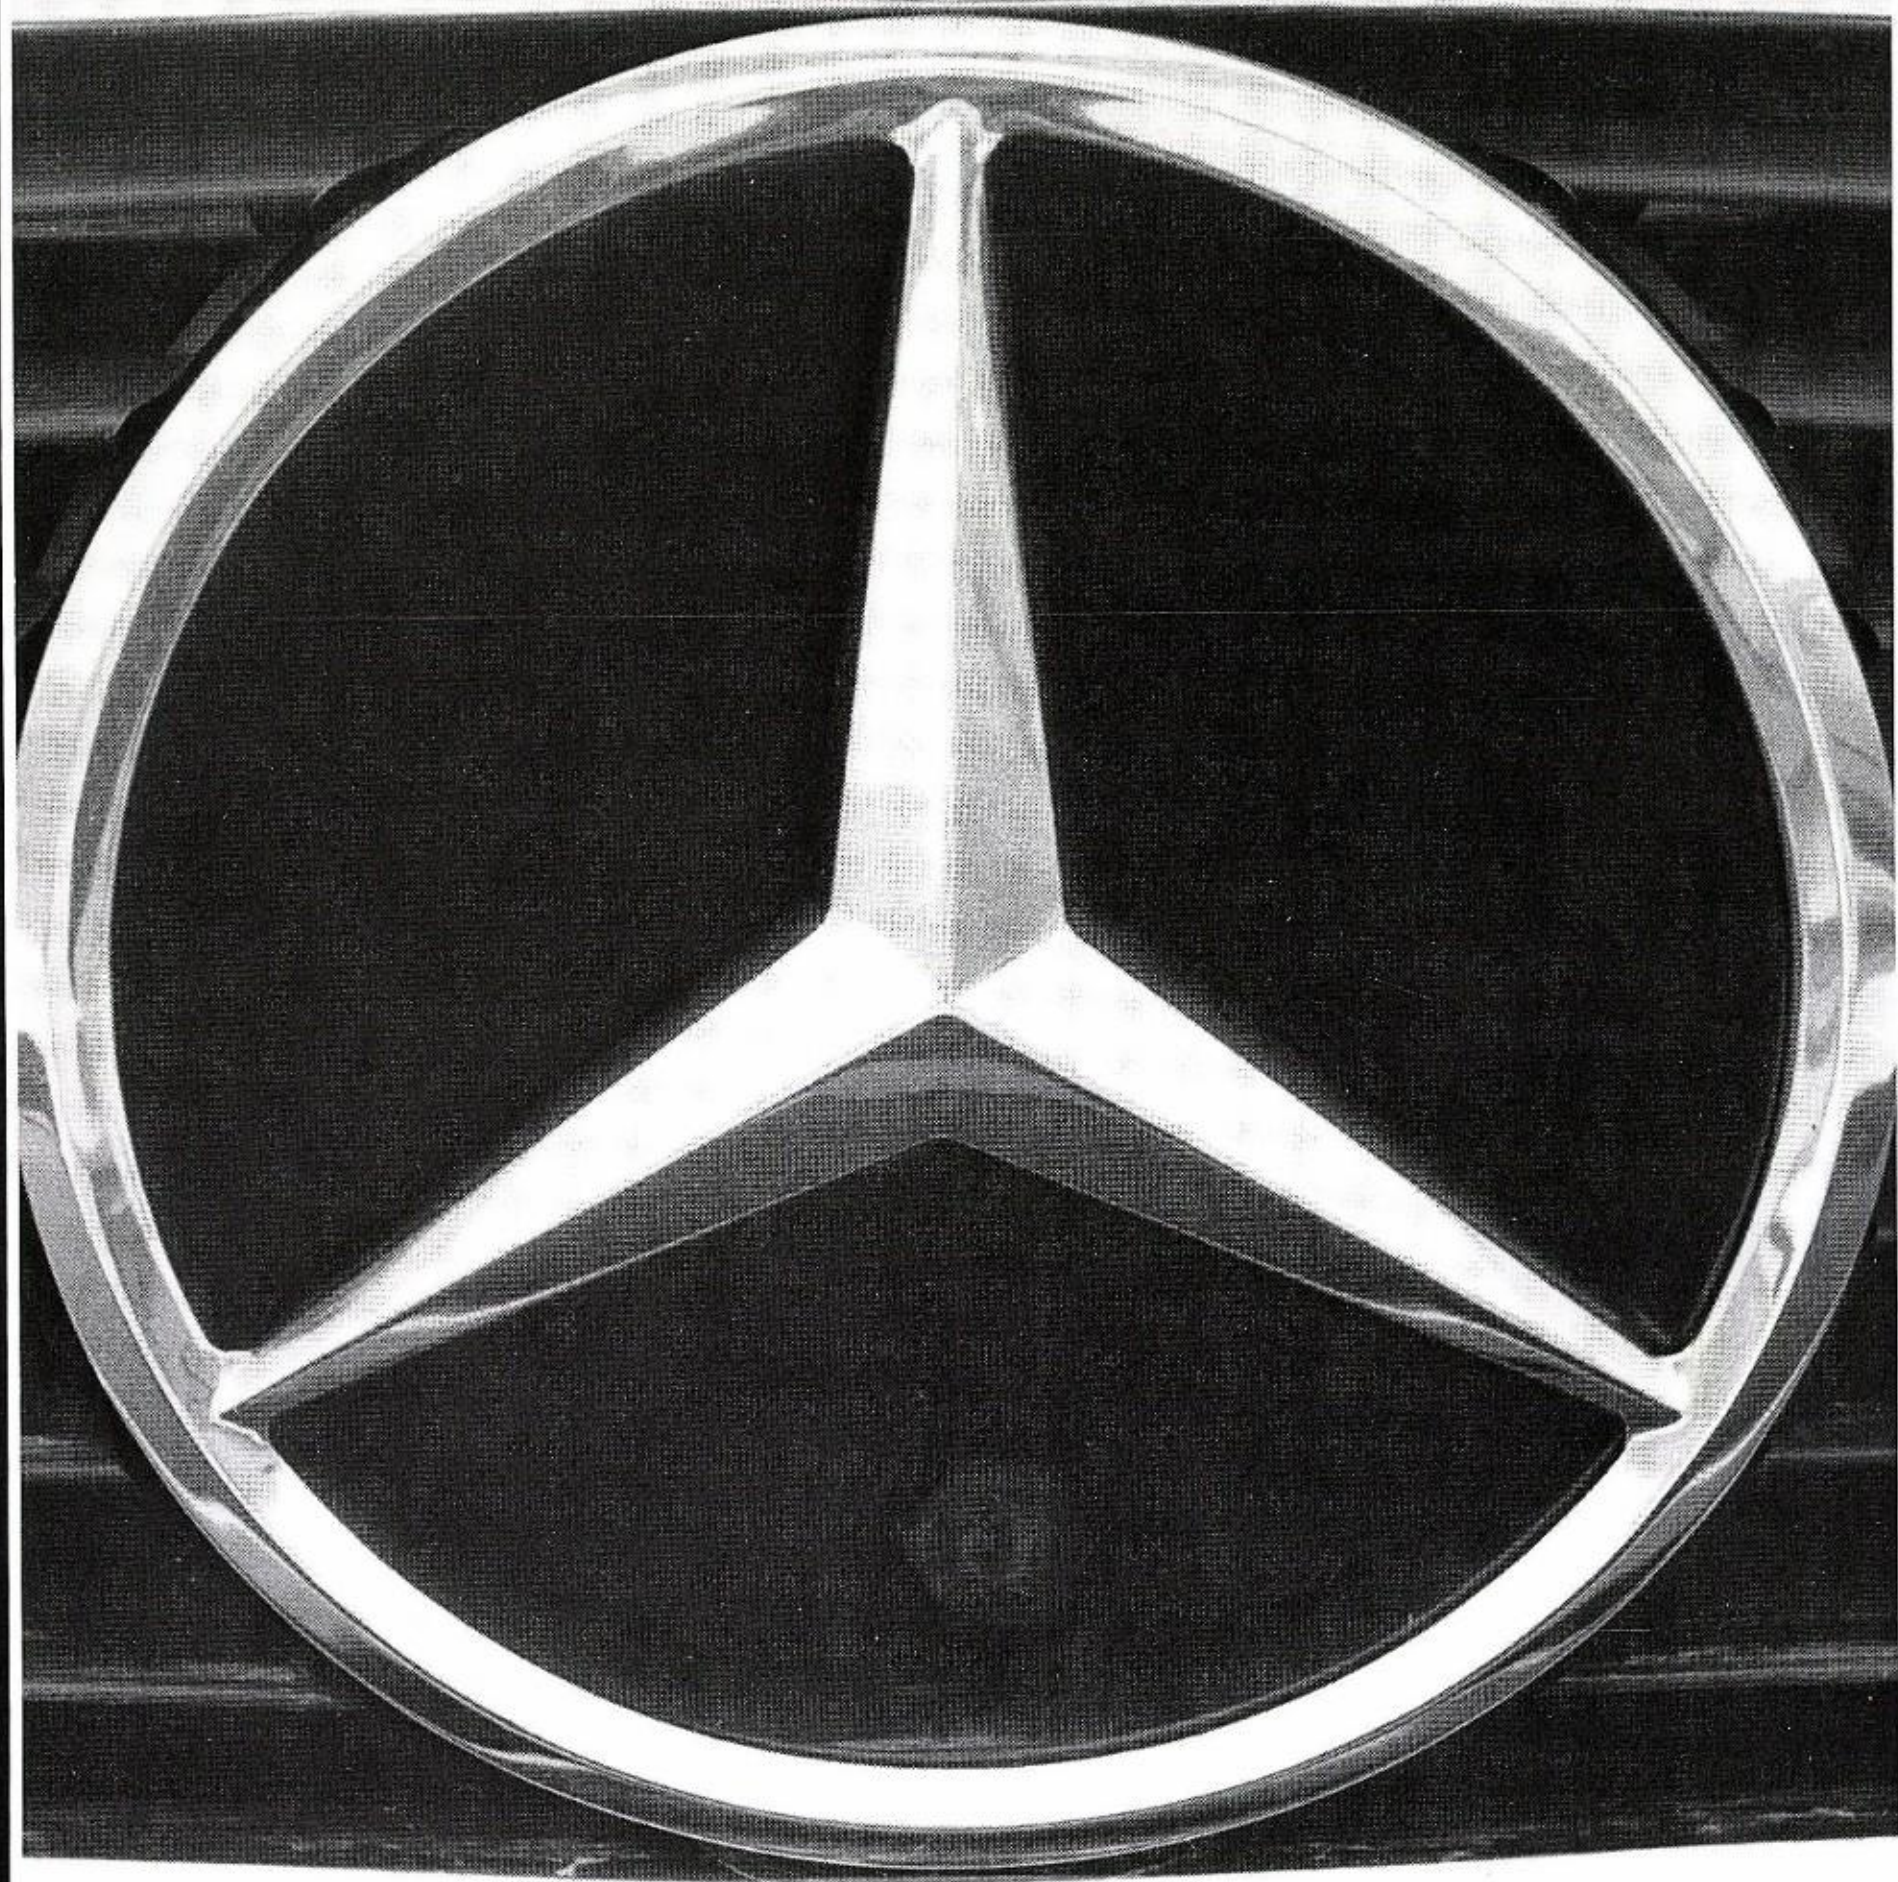

The photographs used were all taken, developed, and printed by staff photographers. The color photographs were processed by National Photo in Prairie Village, Kansas. The sports and certain activity group pictures were taken by J.Q. Adams Photographic Services; mag. shots were by Van Deusen Studio.

The HauberK was distributed to students on May 18, 1987. Students were charged $18.00 for each book, including sales tax. The HauberK was created in Room 135 at Shawnee Mission East High School, 7500 Mission Road, Prairie Village, Kansas, 66205 under the supervision of Mrs. Donna Skates, Yearbook Sponsor.

I realize it would be impossible for me to summarize this year in a few words, but I hope that this book will serve that purpose. With that in mind, I just want to thank Mrs. Donna Skates, Jessie Ullmann, and Kristen Hammond for their incredible support and dedication — without them this book could never have been completed. All of the staff put forth a supreme effort, and we managed to meet the deadlines. Perhaps this book will revive the memories that we each share. But leaving the past behind, I wish you all good luck next year.

A sign of the times.

Hey Big Dickie (Daddy, yeah, yeah)

I loved these trying times we had this year and I couldn't have done it if I weren't to squeeze my left nipple.

And remember, at the Palace, Jesus Rules!

See ya at K-Life

Marchello Bartino, Marshall B. Warrior, Toad, Bitch, Fat Frin, Fat Fubbin Fartin', Big Bostay Burton, etc.

Hope we start hangin' out again by summer. I + kinda slacked off there. Sabais Aces cannot stop rocking asses. Make sure you maintain the eternal high which you seek. We gotta recreate some crazy times w/ Calvin, etc. T, tripping, everything else, Ray, dark + lonelys, Spaghetti, Moffitt, it's all been fun.

I know the who Mercedes scandal hurt your feelings, but try to recover
this summer, and drive up next year
proudly in your 350SEL

MARSHALL

Hgh. You the best boofoo > guy could have not one alone the best head job.

I hope next time you use more lubricant. let beat off together this summer.
I Love you Baby.

Marshall.

You have been a shining light in the dim tunnel known as I in junior study hall. I think you should devote your life to writing a song about Stonefield. How seriously, you've made SH a lot more enjoyable, if that is humanly possible. I will be incredibly happy if I never hear the word Chicken but again wouldn't you agree? Study Hall will be truly unbearable next year without you. Have a good summer (but not too good)

Love, Sara
